

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

3 1761 00016786 6

Presented to the LIBRARY of the UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
by Mrs. H. J. Cody

Edward G. O'Brien
THE

Toronto

ANGLO-SAXON

---

July 1846

CHURCH;

ITS HISTORY REVENUES

AND

GENERAL CHARACTER.

BY HENRY SOAMES, M.A.

CHANCELLOR OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, LONDON.

---

THE THIRD EDITION, WITH ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

---

LONDON:
JOHN W. PARKER, WEST STRAND.

M.DCCC.XLIV.

1844

LONDON:
HARRISON AND CO., PRINTERS,
ST. MARTIN'S LANE.

TO THE REVEREND
HUGH CHAMBRES JONES, M.A.
OF BRYNSTEDFOD, DENBIGHSHIRE,
ARCHDEACON OF ESSEX, AND TREASURER OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, LONDON,

THIS VOLUME IS INSCRIBED, AS A TESTIMONY OF DEEP RESPECT FOR A HIGHLY EFFICIENT AND ACCEPTABLE DISCHARGE OF IMPORTANT OFFICIAL DUTIES; FOR QUALITIES OF HEAD AND HEART, THAT CHRISTIANIZE AND EMBELLISH PRIVATE LIFE; AND FOR A DISINTERESTED VIEW OF ECCLESIASTICAL PATRONAGE
AS A PUBLIC TRUST,

BY HIS OBLIGED AND AFFECTIONATE FRIEND,

FURNEUX PELHAM,
March 5, 1835.

THE AUTHOR.

ADVERTISEMENT

TO

THE THIRD EDITION.

---

As this work has been for a considerable time out of print, it was thought likely that a new Edition would be favourably received by the public. Since its first appearance the edge of opposition to the Church's pecuniary claims has materially worn off. Party-feeling has found new channels, and men are become far better informed, not only as to the amount of ecclesiastical wealth, but also as to the foundations on which it rests. Religious questions have, however, very rarely received more attention than they do at present, and it is impossible to understand them without a competent knowledge of ecclesiastical history. Principles, rendered prominent by passing events, must be stripped of that adventitious claim to notice, and traced upwards, by those who would estimate them rightly. Means of thus treating a considerable number of religious questions, highly interesting to Englishmen, are accumulated in the present volume. It can scarcely, therefore, fail of extending facilities for the acquisition of useful information.

Since this work first appeared, other publications have thrown much important light upon the Anglo-

Saxon period in English history. Of them advantage has been taken in preparing the present Edition for the press. One of them, Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, edited by Mr. Thorpe under the Record Commission, made it seem desirable to add an Appendix. The materials from which this volume was compiled being either printed works of no very difficult access, or extracts from MSS. given in foot notes, it appeared at first necessary to subjoin nothing more than that declaration of Edgar's respecting ecclesiastical dues, of which no notice is taken in preceding compilations upon such subjects. But Mr. Thorpe has printed three pieces with Ælfric's name, one, the document, called sometimes, Ælfric's Canons, at other times, his Epistle to Wulfstine; another, a piece, called Ælfric's Pastoral Epistle, which has a Latin prologue to Archbishop Wulfstan; and a third, styled Ælfric's Epistle, entitled QUANDO DIVIDIS CHRISMA. This last he gives from a Cambridge MS. which exhibits the piece very much curtailed of the proportions found in a Bodleian MS., where it is said, but in a hand, seemingly of Foxe's time, or thereabouts, to be Ælfric's epistle to Wulfstan. Now it is this longer piece which contains the testimony against transubstantiation, extracted and printed by Foxe, in his Martyrology, and by L'Isle, in his Testimony of Antiquitie. This is not found, either in the Pastoral Epistle, inscribed to Wulfstan, or in the truncated piece, Quando dividis Chrisma, thought to have been written for him. An inquirer, therefore, with only Mr. Thorpe's recent and most excellent work before him, may be at a loss to know upon what authority Foxe and L'Isle based their important publications. Those who would wish all doubt upon such a subject to be removed, will naturally be glad of seeing the whole piece, Quando dividis Chrisma, in print. It will, accordingly, be now found in the Appendix to this work, from a transcript made some years ago, in the Bodleian Library. Foxe and L'Isle might have been mistaken in supposing it intended for Wulfstan, but that is immaterial. It has every appearance of Elfric's pen, and must have been much about his age. It is, therefore, quite conclusive as to ancient England's eucharistic belief. It is, however, very much like an episcopal charge, for the delivery of which occasion was taken from the concourse of clergy who came to obtain their annual supplies of consecrated oil. Hence it is quite likely to have been written, either for Wulfstan's delivery upon such an occasion, or for Elfric's own, provided he really became a bishop, as there is reason for believing that he did. This venerable monument of the ancient English Church is also valuable, because it brings to notice many particulars in then existing religious usages. Undoubtedly, it exhibits a great attention to superstitious trifles. But the age could not rise above such weaknesses, and none, who claim for the Anglo-Saxon Church a character substantially Protestant upon the whole, deny her to have received a Romish leaven, especially in rituals.

To this episcopal charge, as it seems fairly entitled to be considered, it was thought that a sermon for the day of its delivery, might well be added. Readers may thus see how the English laity, as well as the clergy, were anciently addressed on Thursday, in Passion week. The sermon has not, indeed, the recommendation of bringing many particulars under view, but it illustrates that remarkable feature in the religious discipline of the times, which drove scandalous offenders from the church, on Ash-Wednesday, and did not allow them to enter it again, until Maundy Thursday; yet expected them to spend much of the intervening time, humbled examples of penitence, around its walls.

STAPLEFORD TAWNEY,
March 11, 1844.

---

ADVERTISEMENT

TO

THE SECOND EDITION.

---

THE call for a Second Edition of this work is a gratifying testimony to the growing desire for such information as it offers. The importance of its pecuniary statements is overlooked by no party. Most Englishmen, partial to the religion of their fathers, feel an interest in tracing existing endowments to the very dawn of national legislation. Tythes admit of no question, and church-shots naturally seem the origin and representatives of the modern church-rate. Light-shot carries that character on the very face, and an universal obligation to church-repair must have been established long before, or it would not be distinctly recognised in the very ancient statute of Circumspecte agatis*. Candid minds are glad of such facts, as answers to any who would ground church-rates upon unproved and improbable charges of clerical artifice. Clergymen still maintain chancels and cathedrals. Those who remember the church-shots, and distinguish minster tythe from parochial, will probably think their ancient liabilities to have been no greater.

Subjects of less temporary interest, must also have contributed to the success of this undertaking. Romanists claim a belief descending uninterruptedly from Augustine: to their Church, England is often thought indebted almost exclusively for conversion; to their pontiff, a right of interference, is represented, as conceded from the first. In other quarters, there is a habit of confounding the seculars, or ordinary clergy, with the regulars, or monks. This latter is, however, the body to which nearly all Henry the Eighth's precedents apply. None of these questions can be rationally discussed, without an acquaintance with our ancient ecclesiastical history.

---

* 13 Edw. I., A. D. 1285.

In reprinting this attempt to spread that branch of knowledge, an italic letter has been used for the Saxon. In thus consulting economy and expedition, the soft and the hard th are necessarily confounded. Otherwise, the character may very well answer every necessary purpose; especially at a time, when Saxon editing has, perhaps, hardly attained maturity.

FURNEUX PELHAM,
June 28, 1838.

---

CONTENTS.

---

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	1

INTRODUCTION.

BRITAIN converted very early . . . . .	19
St. Paul possibly her Apostle . . . . .	21
Joseph of Arimathea . . . . .	23
Glastonbury . . . . .	23
Lucius . . . . .	25
Episcopacy of Ancient Britain . . . . .	27
St. Alban . . . . .	28
Arianism introduced . . . . .	29
Pelagius . . . . .	30
Pelagianism introduced . . . . .	31
————— suppressed . . . . .	32
Settlement of the Saxons . . . . .	32

CHAPTER I.

A. D.
	Jutes, Saxons, and Angles, on the Continent . . . . .	36
	Obstacles to their Conversion . . . . .	37
	Ethelbert, the Bretwalda . . . . .	39
	———— marries Bertha . . . . .	40
	———— long, probably, favourable to Christianity . . . . .	41
	Early Years of Gregory the Great . . . . .	42
	Elected Pope . . . . .	43
	Offended by John the Faster . . . . .	44
	Anecdote of Gregory in the Slave-market . . . . .	46
596.	Augustine despatched into Britain . . . . .	48
	———— His Arrival in Kent . . . . .	48
	———— His Establishment at Canterbury . . . . .	49
598.	———— He sends Laurence and Peter to Rome . . . . .	51
601.	———— Gregory's Answers to his Queries . . . . .	53
	Augustine's Conferences with the Britons . . . . .	55
	Slaughter of the Monks of Bangor . . . . .	58
604.	Death of Augustine . . . . .	59
	Foundation of St. Paul's, in London . . . . .	59

A. D.		PAGE
	Apparent Failure of the Romish Mission . . . . .	61
	Nocturnal Flagellation of Laurentius . . . . .	61
625.	Marriage of Ethelburga into Northumbria . . . . .	61
	Dexterity of Paulinus . . . . .	63
627.	First Conversion of Northumbria . . . . .	65
630.	Conversion of East Anglia . . . . .	67
635.	Final Conversion of Northumbria . . . . .	68
654.	Conversion of Mercia . . . . .	61
	Final Conversion of Essex . . . . .	69
	Conversion of Wessex . . . . .	70
664.	Conversion of Sussex . . . . .	71
	Roman Triumph at Whitby . . . . .	72
	Doctrines . . . . .	73

CHAPTER II.

665.	Consecration of Wilfrid . . . . .	77
669.	Arrival of Theodore . . . . .	78
	St. Chad . . . . .	79
673.	Council of Hertford . . . . .	80
	St. Etheldred . . . . .	81
678.	Deprivation of Wilfrid . . . . .	82
680.	Council of Hatfield . . . . .	83
	Doctrinal Profession of the Anglo-Saxon Church . . . . .	83
	Benedict Biscop . . . . .	84
	Patronage given to the Founders of Churches . . . . .	85
690.	Death of Theodore . . . . .	86
	His Penitential . . . . .	87
	Death of Wilfrid . . . . .	89
693.	Laws of Ina . . . . .	90
694.	Council of Bapchild . . . . .	91
696.	Council of Berghamsted . . . . .	91
	Church-shot imposed by Ina . . . . .	92
	Tythes usual among Pagans . . . . .	93
	Monasteries . . . . .	97
	Pilgrimages to Rome . . . . .	98
709.	Aldhelm . . . . .	90
	Bede . . . . .	100
740.	Egbert . . . . .	104
	Tripartite Division of Tythes . . . . .	106
766.	Alcuin . . . . .	108

A. D.		PAGE
746.	Willibrord . . . . .	111
	Boniface . . . . .	112
747.	Council of Cloveshoo . . . . .	113
	Archbishopric of Lichfield . . . . .	116
787.	First Papal Legates in England . . . . .	117
	Council of Calcuth . . . . .	117
	Peter-pence granted by Offa . . . . .	118
	Image-worship . . . . .	119
792.	Indignantly condemned in England . . . . .	120
	The Caroline Books . . . . .	121
	Egbert's Penitential . . . . .	124
	Abstinence from Blood, and from Strangled and Unclean Animals . . . . .	126
	Uncertainty as to the Use of Fasting for the Dead . . . . .	127

CHAPTER III.

816.	Council of Celychyth . . . . .	129
	Incidental Evidence against Transubstantiation . . . . .	130
	Secular Monasteries . . . . .	132
	Notice of the Ancient British Church . . . . .	133
836.	Ethelwulf . . . . .	134
	St. Swithin . . . . .	135
854.	Ethelwulf's Decimation . . . . .	137
855.	——— Journey to Rome . . . . .	139
858.	——— His Death . . . . .	140
853.	Alfred's Visit to Rome . . . . .	141
	——— His neglected Education . . . . .	143
871.	——— His Accession . . . . .	146
878.	——— His Retirement . . . . .	147
	——— His Victory over the Danes . . . . .	148
	——— His Literary Works . . . . .	149
901.	——— His Death . . . . .	150
	——— His Infirmities . . . . .	151
	——— His Economy of Time . . . . .	152
	——— His Economy of Money . . . . .	154
	——— His Provision for Ecclesiastical Dues . . . . .	155
	——— His truncated Decalogue . . . . .	156
	——— His Theology . . . . .	157
	Erigena . . . . .	159
904.	Alleged Interference of Pope Formosus . . . . .	161

A. D.		PAGE
928.	Council of Grateley, under Athelstan . . . . .	164
	Qualifications of a Thane . . . . .	165
	Doctrines . . . . .	166

CHAPTER IV.

	The Monastic System . . . . .	167
	Birth of Dunstan . . . . .	169
	His Education . . . . .	172
	His Phrenzy . . . . .	173
	He is tonsured, and retires to Glastonbury . . . . .	174
	Introduced at Court . . . . .	175
	Driven from it . . . . .	176
	Argues against Monachism . . . . .	177
	Adopts the Benedictine Habit . . . . .	178
	Introduces it at Glastonbury . . . . .	179
943.	Council of London . . . . .	180
	Archbishop Odo . . . . .	182
	His Canons . . . . .	183
	Ethelwold . . . . .	184
	Foundation of Abingdon . . . . .	184
	Dunstan driven into Exile . . . . .	186
956.	——— restored . . . . .	186
957.	——— advanced to the Episcopate . . . . .	188
959.	——— made Archbishop of Canterbury . . . . .	189
961.	Council of Andover . . . . .	191
	Defined Civil Penalties for recovering Tythes . . . . .	192
	Church-shot reserved for the Ancient Minsters . . . . .	194
	Hardships undergone by the Married Canons . . . . .	195
	Oswald . . . . .	196
	Relics and Pilgrimages . . . . .	198
968.	Council of Winchester . . . . .	200
	The speaking Crucifix . . . . .	201
975.	The Canons reinstated . . . . .	202
978.	Council of Calne . . . . .	203
	Fall of the Floor there . . . . .	203
	Edward the Martyr . . . . .	204
	Ethelred the Unready . . . . .	205
979.	His Coronation . . . . .	205
988.	Death of Dunstan . . . . .	206
	His Resistance to Papal Interference . . . . .	207

A. D.		PAGE
	Alleged Removal of his Remains from Canterbury	208
1008.	Council of Eanham . . . . .	209
	Church Dues defined, but not enforced by Penalties	210
1014.	Council of Haba . . . . .	213
	Church Dues enforced by Penalties . . . . .	214
	Elfric . . . . .	216
	— His Education . . . . .	217
	— Commissioned to regulate Cerne Abbey . . . . .	218
	— His Homilies . . . . .	219
	— His Grammar . . . . .	220
	— His Epistle to Wulfsine . . . . .	220
	— His Epistle to Wulfstan . . . . .	221
	— His Scriptural Translations, and other Works	222
	— Obscurity of his History . . . . .	223
	— Probable Sketch of it . . . . .	224
	— Probable Cause of its Obscurity . . . . .	228
	Canute's Ecclesiastical Laws . . . . .	231
1043.	Edward the Confessor . . . . .	232
1056.	————— His Ecclesiastical Laws	233
1052.	Stigand . . . . .	234
1062.	Foundation of Waltham Abbey . . . . .	235
	Doctrines . . . . .	236
	Additional Note on Elfric . . . . .	241

CHAPTER V.

Salvation offered universally . . . . .	246
Practice the only Test of Sound Religion . . . . .	247
Humility represented as indispensable . . . . .	248
The Human Soul God's Image . . . . .	249
The Bondage of the Will . . . . .	249
Divine Grace indispensable . . . . .	249
Nature of the Christian Church . . . . .	250
The Creed and Lord's Prayer to be explained . . . . .	250
Apocryphal Legends . . . . .	251
Strict Observance of Sunday . . . . .	253
Festivals . . . . .	256
Fasts . . . . .	258
Abstinence from Blood, and various Meats . . . . .	259
Election, Examination, and Engagements of Bishops	260
Their Legislative Rights . . . . .	262

	PAGE
Their Jurisdiction in the County Courts . . . . .	263
Their Sees . . . . .	264
Their Duties and Restrictions . . . . .	265
Examinations for Orders . . . . .	266
Regulations for the Clergy . . . . .	268
Endeavours to keep them unmarried . . . . .	269
Ministerial Gradations . . . . .	270
Anglo-Saxon Monks . . . . .	272
Regulations provided for them . . . . .	274
The Trinoda Necessitas . . . . .	275
Guildships . . . . .	275
Coronation Oath . . . . .	276
Anglo-Saxon Laws relating to Baptism . . . . .	277
Marriages . . . . .	278
Wakes . . . . .	280
Burial in Churches . . . . .	280
Dedication of Churches . . . . .	281
Anglo-Saxon Buildings . . . . .	281
Organs . . . . .	282
Ordeals . . . . .	283
The Truce of Religion . . . . .	286
Consecrated Water and Oil used as Charms . . . . .	287
Commutations of Penance . . . . .	288
St. Chad's Horse-wain . . . . .	290
St. Cuthbert . . . . .	290
St. Etheldred . . . . .	291
St. Frideswide . . . . .	292
St. Edmund the King . . . . .	293
St. Oswald . . . . .	294
St. Guthlac . . . . .	295
Anglo-Saxon versions of Scripture . . . . .	296
Conclusion . . . . .	300

APPENDIX.

I. KING EDGAR'S PROCLAMATION . . . . .	304
II. ELFRIC'S SECOND EPISTLE . . . . .	308
III. SERMON ON THE LORD'S SUPPER-DAY . . . . .	338
IV. ANGLO-SAXON ECCLESIASTICAL CHRONOLOGY . . . . .	345
INDEX . . . . .	347

P R E F A C E.

---

IN preparing the Bampton Lectures of 1830<sup>1</sup>, it became obvious that the subject could not be thoroughly understood, without various historical details and miscellaneous particulars, inadmissible in a limited course of doctrinal sermons. Materials for supplying these deficiencies were naturally accumulated while the undertaking was in progress. Many more have been collected since. The recent agitation of pecuniary questions affecting the Church, gave encouragement for completing, arranging, and publishing this mass of information. England is overspread, more or less completely, with endowed places of religious worship, uniform in doctrine and discipline, of very ancient foundation, and immemorially protected by the State. It has, also, no small number of endowments, occasionally in land, supporting places of worship far from uniform as to doctrine or discipline, and of no ancient foundation, but fully protected by the State. The propriety of such protection, in the latter case, has been conceded by all parties. It seems to have occurred to no man that these modern foundations are become public property, because they are no longer private inheritances. Hence we have heard nothing of their just liability to seizure for any purpose whatever, either religious, or local, or fiscal; nor have individual holders been tempted by a prospect of appropriating to their own emolument such parts of them as may fortunately be in their hands. Hitherto this line of argument has been reserved for our ancient religious foundations. These are often treated not only as mere creatures of some legislative act, but also as justly convertible, by like authority, to any purpose, either public or private, or to both conjointly, as expediency or accident may suggest. The enactment, however, which this view assumes, has not found admittance into collections of the national records; certainly an extraordinary fate for such a statute. Nor is it less unaccountable that no trace of it appears in those monkish chronicles which comprise our ancient history, and which are ordinarily copious, nay, even rhetorical, when they have to mention some advantage gained by religion. A legislature also that provided churches, would hardly overlook the size of parishes. This, however, an uninquiring mind might assign to accident, or caprice. Many rural parishes, indeed, are so small as to raise the wonder of a townsman, and to render plans, drawn from cases widely different, neither very practicable nor important.

---

<sup>1</sup> An Inquiry into the Doctrines of the Anglo-Saxon Church.

Anglo-Saxon Ecclesiastical History throws light upon these difficulties. It introduces to notice an active and able Asiatic, our first acknowledged metropolitan, who formed the plan of inducing Englishmen to build and endow churches on their estates, by tempting them, as Justinian had his own countrymen, with the patronage of their several foundations<sup>2</sup>. It shows this policy to have been approved by Athelstan, one of the wisest, most powerful, and most energetic of Anglo-Saxon princes; who granted the rank of thane to proprietors, being otherwise qualified, who would not see their tenants unprovided with a place of worship<sup>3</sup>. It records an exhortation of the archbishops, given solemnly at a witena-gemot early in the eleventh century, to the building of churches "in every place<sup>4</sup>." They would hardly have acted thus at such a time, without sanction from the legislature. Thus we find the national authorities urging and alluring opulent individuals to build and endow churches upon their lands, during the whole period of nearly four hundred years—from Theodore to the Conquest. It is known, that many of these foundations are of a subsequent date, and, probably, existing parochial subdivisions were not consummated under six hundred years. Our ancient and uniform religious endowments arose then, like the multiform religious foundations of later times, from the spontaneous liberality of successive individuals. Formerly also, as now, there was every variety in the magnitudes of property. Because, however an estate was small, its lord often would not be without a church upon it. In many cases too, he shewed whose accommodation was first consulted, by placing the new erection close to his own home, although both the chief population, and the house provided for its minister, might be at some distance. Parishes, therefore, owe their actual dimensions to no negligence or caprice, but to the accidental inequalities of private property.

---

<sup>2</sup> Page 85.

---

<sup>3</sup> Page 165.

<sup>4</sup> Page 212.

This private origin of English parochial religious foundations is obviously the clue to existing rights of patronage. Hence the verse familiar to canonists, in days when church-building was common, or had lately been so,

Patronum faciunt dos, edificatio, fundus<sup>5</sup>.

The church's dowry of glebe had notoriously been settled upon it by some land-owner, who likewise raised the fabric, and provided more effectually for the maintenance of its minister, by resigning in his favour one-tenth of all that his own possessions around should hereafter produce. Such public spirit justly demanded a suitable acknowledgment. None could be more so, than a freehold right of selecting, under proper control, that functionary who was to realize the liberal donor's pious intentions. This was nothing beyond an equitable return to an individual, who had not only provided his neighbours with a place of religious worship at his own expense, but had also rendered this liberality available to them, and to those who should come after them, by building a parsonage, by surrendering inalienably a part of his own property as glebe, and by burdening irredeemably the remainder. Undoubtedly the justice thus done to founders has withdrawn a very large number of benefices from professional emulation. But the laity have really no great practical reason to complain of this. They thus, however, draw important pecuniary benefits from the Church, and they are thus additionally bound to respect ecclesiastical rights. A man may have little value for religion, or may dislike that of his fathers; but surely he cannot be justified in encroaching upon the patrimonies of his kinsmen or neighbours. Now, this character attaches to a great proportion of English parochial preferments. A landowner has presented a younger son to a living in the gift of his family, or another person has invested one child's portion in an advowson, or presentation; advancing like sums to settle his remaining children in secular callings, or situations. Charity forbids a belief that the lay brother can desire, or could even endure, to have the clergyman's portion confiscated to swell his own rent-roll, or pay his own taxes.

---

<sup>5</sup> J. DE ATON, Const. Legit. totius Regionis Angl. f. 105.

Our larger ancient churches have, indeed, been founded by the crown, and so have many of the smaller. But no reasonable or safe principle will allow the denial to such foundations of all that inviolability which rightfully belongs to those that originated in the public-spirited sacrifices of individuals. If even ages of possession are no secure title to a royal grant, many a child of affluence must bid farewell to hereditary splendour, and enter a profession, or sue for a pension.

Unquestionably, the great bulk of our ancient religious revenue arises from tythes, and these may be hastily regarded as wholly derivable from legislative liberality. But were this undeniable, a new appropriation, advantageous, even temporarily, to any other than the landlord, is obviously very difficult while he remains. It would, however, be a monstrous folly to present gratuitously persons of the richest class with a large augmentation of their fortunes, which they have neither inherited nor purchased, and to which, on any account, they have no more just or equitable claim than they have to some adjoining estate. If, instead of such idle prodigality, a fiscal appropriation were advocated, it would be trifling with the hopes of undiscerning occupiers. The tax-gatherer would disappoint them bitterly. For commissioners, clerks, and surveyors, patronized by the ruling party, some fortunes, it is true, might be provided, and many comfortable situations. The pressure of taxation, too, might be somewhat modified, or even lessened. But this advantage, hardly perceptible to individuals, would be fatally counterbalanced by a national disregard of all that renders property secure.

A sufficient knowledge of our ancient history gives, however, great reason to doubt the legislative origin of tythes. They seem to have been paid by the Anglo-Saxons before the legislature interfered to enforce them. There are, in fact, traces of them in every age and country<sup>6</sup>. Hence this appropriation has not unreasonably been considered as dictated by that patriarchal creed, which men have nowhere been able wholly to forget. When an early Anglo-Saxon proprietor founded a church, he solemnly dedicated the tythes of his land for its maintenance, apparently, without any legal compulsion, or any hesitation, or reserve. His foundation was an evidence of his piety; and such a man could feel no disposition to deny a religious claim which even heathens admitted. A similar spirit, however, would inevitably be wanting to some among the representatives or posterity of any man. Individuals are certain to arise eager to forget any deductions under which their estates were acquired. To restrain this dishonourable rapacity, the Saxon legislature at length interfered, and that repeatedly. At first, it was hoped that solemn injunctions, or ecclesiastical censures, might sufficiently remind selfish men of their duty to religion, and of the terms on which they had become possessed of land. Hence Athelstan's legislature pronounced tythes demandable both upon crops and stock, requiring them to be strictly rendered<sup>7</sup>. Edmund the Elder again gave legislative weight to this injunction<sup>8</sup>. Mere admonition, however, will not long strive successfully against the necessities, artifices, and avarice of mankind. Edgar's legislature was, accordingly, driven to compel, by civil penalties, the due discharge of that claim to which every landowner had found his possessions liable<sup>9</sup>. A precedent for this act of justice was, indeed, afforded by Alfred's treaty with Godrun. The great king was contented to naturalise a colony of his Danish invaders in the eastern counties: but he would not allow these unwelcome settlers to escape from liabilities immemorially fixed upon their several estates. Well, however, did he know the lawless rapacity with which he had to deal. He, therefore, provided pecuniary fines for keeping the new proprietors to the only terms on which he was willing to place them in possession, or, indeed, considered himself able<sup>10</sup>. From his reign more than nine hundred

---

<sup>6</sup> Page 93.

---

<sup>7</sup> Page 164.

<sup>8</sup> Page 181.

<sup>9</sup> Page 191.

<sup>10</sup> Page 155.

years have now elapsed; from Edgar's, not much less. So long, then, has English landed property been inherited, or otherwise acquired, under a system of protecting, by civil penalties, those rights to tythe with which proprietors, greatly anterior to Alfred, had burdened their estates. How importantly this immemorial deduction has affected every sale of land, the very numerous tythe-free properties, now in England, afford evidence alike ample and irresistible.

Among such as feel unwillingly the force of this, there are some who would still fain appropriate more than they have purchased or inherited, by making tythes release them, in a great degree, from assessment to the poor. Ordinarily they pour contempt upon antiquity; now they gladly seek its aid. They maintain that tythes were originally granted with a reserve of either one-fourth, or one-third, for charitable purposes. Anglo-Saxon history will show that views like theirs are of very ancient standing. Evidently there were thanes anxious to regard the religious rent-charge, under which they had acquired their several estates, as an exemption from all further provision for indigence. The papal legates at Calcuith expressly denied this principle<sup>11</sup>: so did Archbishop Odo a hundred and fifty years later<sup>12</sup>. It could, undoubtedly, find some shelter under venerable names. The missionary, Augustine, is thought favourable to it, as he seems to have bestowed a fourth of the eucharistic oblations upon the poor<sup>13</sup>. Egbert, archbishop of York, claims for them a third of the tythes<sup>14</sup>. This claim could plead subsequently the great authority of Elfric<sup>15</sup>. But even he lived while the parochial subdivision of England was in progress. The quadripartite or tripartite division of tythes arose, however, from the minster-system, and was intended for it. Now, to supersede it, in a very great degree, by the universal diffusion of a parochial clergy, was a leading object of national and individual piety during several ages. The only legislative authority produced for the quadripartite or tripartite division, is a doubtful enactment attributed to Ethelred. The principle really looks for sanction to three celebrated individuals, all guided by foreign canonists, and chiefly thinking of a clerical body settled round a large church, both to serve it, and to itinerate in the neighbouring country. Scanty as are these authorities, a wary advocate would, probably, dispense with one of them. It appears from Egbert, that the "year's tenth sceat was paid at Easter"<sup>16</sup>." If, therefore, his authority be good for a third of the tythes to relieve the poor, it may be equally good for every tenth groat from the dividends, from the gains of all placemen, trading and professional men, not holding a church benefice, and from all annuities. Nor do Anglo-Saxon monuments refuse to the Church other

---

<sup>11</sup> Page 118.<sup>12</sup> Page 183.<sup>13</sup> Page 53.<sup>14</sup> Page 106.

---

<sup>15</sup> "The holy Fathers have also decreed, that tythes be paid into God's Church, and that the priest go to them, and divide them into three parts; one for the reparation of the church, a second to the poor, a third to God's servants who attend the church."—JOHNSON'S Transl. sub ann. 957. SPELM. i. 578. WILK. i. 253.

<sup>16</sup> Page 108. Wilkins (i. 123) renders the Saxon cum decimum obolum annuum solvimus. The sceat, however, which answers to his obolum, was equivalent to ten sticas. Eight of these made a penny, worth a modern three-pence.—HICKES, Diss. Epist. 111.

authority, and that of a more formal character, even for such a claim as this. The laws of Edward the Confessor impose expressly tythes upon trade<sup>17</sup>. Those, however, who would claim for the poor one-fourth, or one-third of the tythes, need complain but little of deficiencies in early canons and enactments. The famous statute of Elizabeth has pretty thoroughly brought their favourite principle into active operation. One-fourth of the tythes, or even more, is commonly insufficient to defray assessments for the poor on that property, the glebe, and the parsonage-house. Private charity makes inroads upon the remainder to an extent of which persons unacquainted with clerical expenditure, are very little aware. At least, another fourth of the tythes, during an incumbency, is often absorbed by the house, buildings, and chancel, together with dilapidations.

Besides tythes, however, our ancient religious foundations are endowed with rent-charges for other purposes connected with their existence and efficiency. It certainly does not appear that these are anterior to the Saxon conversion; they plead no higher authority, then, than that of ancient legislation: this plea they can powerfully urge. Church-shot was imposed by Ina<sup>18</sup>; and, in all probability, if his legislature did not follow here a known and approved precedent, its own example quickly acted upon every kingdom of the Heptarchy. Alfred, accordingly, stipulated with Godrun, that, in addition to tithes, light-shot and plough-alms should be regularly paid by the new Danish proprietors<sup>19</sup>. As

---

<sup>17</sup> Page 233.

<sup>18</sup> Page 92.

<sup>19</sup> Page 155.

years rolled on, these claims naturally encountered many cases of denial or evasion. Hence the legislature under Athelstan<sup>20</sup>, Edgar<sup>21</sup>, and Ethelred<sup>22</sup>, lent them new force, by providing civil penalties for their recovery. The latest of these enactments has an antiquity of more than eight hundred years: so long, then, at the least, has landed property been inherited, purchased, or otherwise acquired, under a liability to rent-charges, independently of tythes, statutably settled upon our ancient places of worship. Any such rent-charge, settled upon a modern place of worship, though comparatively a mere matter of yesterday, would undoubtedly be claimed as only a debt of justice. Vainly would an occupant plead religious repugnance to such an application of his money: perhaps he might be reminded of Jewish scruples, upon the lawfulness of paying tribute to Cæsar<sup>23</sup>. A sympathy so acute between purse and conscience would certainly have little chance of meeting with respect.

It is true that parochial collectors have long ceased from application for church-shot, light-shot, and plough-alms. Those who delight in throwing unworthy imputations upon the Church, may be at a loss to account for this forbearance. Such as would reason calmly upon known facts, will, probably, view the modern church-rate, raised for some of the purposes, if not for all, answered by these ancient payments, as merely their successor and representative. That rate is no offspring, then, of some blind prescription, but as regularly derived from

---

<sup>20</sup> Page 164.

<sup>21</sup> Page 192.

<sup>22</sup> Pages 210, 214.

<sup>23</sup> St. Matt. xxii. 17.

legislative acts, yet extant, as any other public burthen. Its name and form, indeed, are changed; but here the payer has no reason to complain: he probably foresaw this, and easily consented. In country parishes, church-rates are trifling, unless under the rare occurrence of extensive works required. For such an emergency, there are some who would again make the tythes alone responsible. Perhaps, as men are fond of an ancient lineage, these reasoners may be glad to learn that their class is as old as Canute at the least: that prince, however, declares, that church-repair rightfully concerns the whole community<sup>24</sup>: nor is any other principle reasonable. The re-building, or even the repair of a spacious pile, might absorb the tythes of several years, leaving no remuneration for the duty, if the living were a rectory; if a vicarage, wholly stripping an unfortunate impropiator of his resources.

If an innovating party were, however, driven into an admission of violence to founders, and hardships to possessors, an apology would, probably, be sought in the Reformation; but, surely no precedent is afforded here as to polity. Episcopacy was rooted in this country on the Saxon conversion: hence every ancient religious foundation was established with an eye to place it under the superintendence of a bishop. When, therefore, episcopal incumbents were superseded under the Commonwealth by Presbyterians, or Independents, undoubtedly violence was done to those pious intentions which gave us our ancient churches. But of any such injustice the Reformation is guiltless; it left religious endowments, of remote establishment, under the very kind of governance that had been originally provided for them.

---

<sup>24</sup> Page 232.

It likewise left untouched the exterior condition of all parochial incumbents, and of the dignitaries in some cathedrals. None of these were disturbed in their rights, revenues, or privileges, if only willing to recognise the principles regularly sanctioned by their own body, constitutionally consulted. It is true that all restraint was withdrawn upon their discretion as to marriage; but ancient ecclesiastical history shews no departure here from the intentions of those to whom we owe our churches. It exhibits clergymen ordinarily married, whether employed about a cathedral or in a rural parish. Clerical marriages, in fact, although eventually pronounced uncanonical and rendered penal, were never illegal: nor was free license for them anything else than a return to that principle which had originally prevailed.

It is the same with the substitution of canons for monks in a few cathedrals. Anglo-Saxon ecclesiastical history stamps the Benedictines as intruders, and their expulsion as an act of justice to founders<sup>25</sup>. The Reformation, therefore, affords no precedent bearing either upon polity or station, for interference with the clergy, termed secular by Romanists. Of that ancient body, the present ecclesiastical estate of England is the lineal successor and the lawful representative.

Nor did the Reformation make any change in our

---

<sup>25</sup> Pages 195, 200, 202, 203.

Church's orthodoxy. It was one of Theodore's earliest cares to settle a national establishment upon the principle of assent to the first four general councils, with the supplemental fifth<sup>26</sup>; a similar base was laid by the Reformers. At Calcuith this was somewhat widened; assent being there given to the first six general councils<sup>27</sup>. But Elfric subsequently shows that this extension was not viewed as interfering with Theodore's original principle<sup>28</sup>: it was not, in fact, material; it was little more than a fuller admission of those doctrines which have been pronounced orthodox by the consent of ages<sup>29</sup>. If the Reformers, therefore, had afforded entrance to any such opinions as pass under the name of Unitarian, obvious injustice would have been done to that liberality which has provided our ancient religious endowments. To this innovation, however, Cranmer and his friends were no more inclined than Theodore himself: they jealously guarded the great landmarks of belief which antiquity has established, and which the founders of our churches were equally scrupulous in respecting.

In one capital article of faith, undoubtedly, the Reformation effected a signal change: it banished from our churches a belief in the corporal presence; but how

---

<sup>26</sup> Page 83.

<sup>27</sup> Page 118.

<sup>28</sup> "These four synods are to be regarded as the four books of Christ in his Church. Many synods have been holden since; but yet these are of the greatest authority."—JOHNSON'S Transl. SPELM. i. 581. WILK. i. 254.

<sup>29</sup> The fifth general council is the second of Constantinople, assembled in 553: it condemned the errors of Origen. The sixth general council is the third of Constantinople, assembled in 680: it condemned the Monothelites.

this had gained a possession of them had never been thoroughly examined. It was, however, notoriously a doctrine solemnly affirmed by no earlier leading ecclesiastical assembly than the fourth Lateran council: a body sadly late<sup>30</sup> for adding to the creed, and about which scholars out of Italy were, besides, divided in opinion. Eventually, the Council of Trent stamped a new authority upon transubstantiation<sup>31</sup>. But there was no reason why England should assent: her voice was not heard in the deliberations. Her authorities, however, were then investigating the question at home, and they came to a different conclusion. An independent body was fully justified in acting thus in any case, for which, direction would be vainly sought from ancient councils. In this case, the authorities of England were more than justified. In expelling transubstantiation from our churches, they prevented a leading doctrine from being taught in them, which their founders had expressly repudiated. The disclaimer of ancient England is, perhaps, even stronger here than that of modern. Had transubstantiation, then, when first regularly examined by the national authorities, been imposed upon incumbents, a like violence would have been done to the piety which provided our ancient religious endowments—to that which was done when Episcopalians were ejected—and to that which would be done if Unitarians were admitted.

In common with her continental neighbours, England

---

<sup>30</sup> 1215.

<sup>31</sup> In 1551. The Forty-two Articles were agreed upon in 1552.

had adopted other doctrines, and religious usages, found embarrassing on the revival of learning. Scholars vainly sought authority for them in Scripture, or in the earlier monuments of theology, or in conciliar decisions of acknowledged weight: hence arose a general anxiety for the solemn and sufficient investigation of these difficulties. On the Continent, this call was answered in some degree at Trent; in England, by an appeal to the national authorities. Again, the two parties disagreed: English divines rejected principles and practices unsupported by Scripture, or primitive antiquity, or universal recognition. Evidently here, too, an independent body was fully justified: nor was violence done to those intentions which had endowed the secular clergy. Image-worship had been indignantly rejected in ancient England<sup>32</sup>. Of other principles abandoned by the Reformers, no one, excepting transubstantiation, had attracted any particular notice. Anglo-Saxon monuments offer dubious traces of them, but no more: undoubtedly they were not received as articles of faith<sup>33</sup>. Appeals against them have accordingly, been often made, and far from rashly, to our ancient Church. They were, in fact, lingering remains of exploded Paganism, which had defied extirpation, and which a spirit of insidious compromise had gradually invested with something of a Christian character. But even when a firm footing had been gained by these excrescences, they had no operation upon discipline, and rarely bore upon any vital question of doctrine; they merely came before a reflecting mind as unexamined admissions of one age, which were fairly open to revision from another. If that other should decide upon pruning them away, evidently the religious fabric, both spiritual and visible, would retain its full integrity and purity. With such questions as our Lord's divinity, transubstantiation, and episcopacy, the case is widely different.

---

<sup>32</sup> Page 120.

<sup>33</sup> See the Author's Bampton Lectures.

Attention to subjects of so much interest and importance, may be invited, it is hoped, neither unusefully nor unacceptably. Questions of a religious nature have been, during several years, keenly agitated, and still retain a powerful hold upon the public mind. For understanding them, that kind of information is demanded, which the present work supplies. Much of it, undoubtedly, may be found elsewhere, but in books little known, or likely to be generally read. Hence there is room for such a volume as the present, especially as it offers some particulars previously not in print. It may also complete collections upon Anglo-Saxon affairs; many of its details, upon points that require consideration, having a fulness which they seldom receive in civil history. Care has been taken to keep it within moderate dimensions. No material fact, it is believed, connected with religion, has been either omitted, or treated insufficiently; but a few persons and incidents, mentioned in older books, do not appear in this; because they seemed no longer possessed of any adequate claims to notice.

---

INTRODUCTION.

CONVERSION OF ANCIENT BRITAIN—ATTRIBUTED VARIOUSLY TO APOSTLES
—JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA'S ALLEGED SETTLEMENT AT GLASTONBURY —LUCIUS—CHRISTIAN BRITAIN EPISCOPAL FROM THE FIRST—ST.
ALBAN, THE BRITISH PROTOMARTYR—INTRODUCTION OF ARIANISM—PELAGIANISM—ARRIVAL OF THE SAXONS.

WITHIN little more than a century from our Saviour's passion, Justin Martyr<sup>1</sup> places Christians in every country known to the Romans. Britain is not expressly mentioned; but her partial conversion has hence allowably been inferred<sup>2</sup>. Irenæus adds probability to this inference<sup>3</sup>. He declares, in one place, that our holy religion was propagated to earth's utmost bounds by the apostles and their disciples. In another, he names the Celts

<sup>1</sup> A.D. 140 is the age assigned by Cave (Hist. Lit. Lond. 1688, p. 36) to Justin Martyr. He appears from Tatian (Contra Græcos, ad calcem Just. Mart. Paris. 1636, p. 157,) to have been put to death by the machinations of Crescens, a philosopher, whose enmity he had incurred by an exposure of his hypocrisy. This martyrdom happened in the year 166. "The author of the Alexandrian Chronicle sets the death of St. Justin down in this year, and we have not any certain proof."—DU PIN'S Eccl. Writers. Engl. Transl. Lond. 1696, i. 51.

<sup>2</sup> Ουδὲ ἐν γὰρ ὅλως ἐστὶ τὸ

γένος ἀνθρώπων, εἴτε βαρβάρων, εἴτε Ἑλλήνων, εἴτε ἀπλῶς φντινοῦν ὀνόματι προσαγορευομένων, ἢ ἀμαξοβίων, ἢ αὐοίκων καλουμένων, ἢ ἐν σκηναῖς κτηνοτρόφων οἰκοῦντων, ἐν οἷς μὴ διὰ τοῦ ὀνόματος τοῦ σταυροθέντος Ἰησοῦ εὐχαὶ καὶ εὐχαριστίαι τῷ Πατρὶ καὶ ποιητῇ τῶν ὅλων γίνονται.—S. JUST. MART. cum Tryphone Judæo Dialogus. Ed. Thirlby. Lond. 1722, p. 388. Ed. Paris. 1636, p. 345.

<sup>3</sup> Assigned by Cave (Hist. Lit. 40) to the year 167. He appears to have been born A.D. 97, and to have lived beyond the age of ninety.

among nations thus enlightened<sup>1</sup>. A Celtic race was then seated in the British isles, and may reasonably be included, especially when Justin's language is recollected, within the enumeration of Irenæus. The testimony of Tertullian is more decisive. He speaks of British districts inaccessible to Roman arms, but subdued by Christ<sup>2</sup>. Had not the faith of Jesus obtained considerable notice in more polished quarters of the island, it would hardly have won a way into its remoter regions. Tertullian's authority, therefore, establishes abundantly, that when the second century closed<sup>3</sup>, Christianity was far from novel to the tribes of Britain. Great probability is thus given to that statement of Eusebius, which attributes British acquaintance with the Gospel to some of the apostles<sup>4</sup>. Hence also we are prepared for assenting to the obscure intimation of Gildas, earliest of our national historical writers, which would lead us to conclude that the light of Christianity had shone upon his countrymen before their signal defeat under Boadicea<sup>5</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Ἡ μὲν γὰρ ἐκκλησία, καίπερ καθ' ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης ἕως περάτων τῆς γῆς διεσπαρμένη, παρὰ δὲ τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ τῶν ἐκείνων μαθητῶν παρα-λαβοῦσα τὴν εἰς ἕνα θεὸν πατέρα παντοκράτορα τὸν πεποιη-κότα τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν καὶ τὰς θαλάσσας, καὶ πάντα τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς, πίστιν. (D. IREN.
adv. Hæres. l. 1. c. 2. Lut. Par.
1675, p. 50.) Καὶ οὔτε αἱ ἐν Γερμανίαις ἰδρυμέναί ἐκκλησῖαι ἄλλως πεπιστεύκασιν, ἢ ἄλλως παραιδόασιν, οὔτε ἐν ταῖς Ἰβηρίαις, οὔτε ἐν Κελτοῖς.
—Ibid. c. 3. p. 52.

<sup>2</sup> "Britannorum inaccessa Romanis loca, Christo vero subdita."

TERTULL. adv. Judæos, Lut. Par.
1664, p. 189.

<sup>3</sup> Tertullian's birth is considered by Cave to have taken place before the middle of the second century.
"The treatise adversus Judæos is supposed by Pamelius to have been written in the year 198; by Allix, after Baronius, in 208."—BR. KAYE on the Writings of Tertullian.
Camb. 1826, p. 50.

<sup>4</sup> Ἐτέρους ὑπὲρ τὸν Ὠκεανὸν παρελθεῖν ἐπὶ τὰς καλουμένās Βρεττανικὰς νήσους.—
EUSEB. Demonst. Evang. l. 3. c. 7.
Par. 1628, p. 112.

<sup>5</sup> "Interea glaciali frigore rigenti insulæ, et velut longiore terrarum secessu soli visibili non proximæ,

The high antiquity of Britain's conversion being thus established, her authors have naturally been desirous of connecting it with some of the more illustrious names in religious history. Among the apostles, James the son of Zebedee and brother of John, Simon Zelotes, Simon Peter, and St. Paul, have been variously named as the evangelists of our island. The first three cases are not supported by sufficient authority to render them worthy of more than a passing notice<sup>1</sup>. Of St. Paul's personal services to Britain there are presumptions of some weight. Clemens Romanus affirms that great apostle to have preached as far as the utmost bounds of the west<sup>2</sup>. St. Jerome says, that he imitated the Sun of Righteousness in going from one ocean to the other<sup>3</sup>, and that his evangelical labours extended to the western parts<sup>4</sup>. By such expressions Britain was commonly understood<sup>5</sup>. Theo-verus ille Sol, non de firmamento solum temporali, sed de summa etiam cœlorum arce cuncta tempora excedente, orbi universo præfulgidum sui coruscum ostentans; tempore, ut scimus, summo Tiberii Cæsaris, quo absque ullo impedimento ejus propagabatur religio, comminata, Senatu nolente, a principe morte dilatoribus militum ejusdem, radios suos primum indulget, id est, sua præcepta, Christus."—GILDAS de Excidio Britannia. Lond. 1838, p. 16.

<sup>1</sup> The evidence upon which these cases rest, and remarks upon it, may be seen in Abp. Ussher's Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. p. 3.

<sup>2</sup> Διὰ ζήλον ὁ Παῦλος ὑπομονῆς βραβεῖον ἀπέσχευεν, ἐπτάκις δεσμὰ φορέσας, ῥαβδευθεὶς, λιθασθεὶς, κήρυξ γενόμενος ἐν τῇ ἀνατολῇ, καὶ ἐν τῇ δύσει, τὸ γενεῖον τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ κλέος ἔλαβεν, δικαιοσύνην δι-

δάξας ὅλον τὸν κόσμον, καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως ἐλθὼν.—S. CLEMENS ad Cor. inter SS. Patres Apost. Coteler. Lut. Par. 1672, p. 94.

<sup>3</sup> "Qui (Paulus) vocatus a Domino, effusus est super faciem universæ terræ, ut prædicaret evangelium de Hierosolymis usque ad Illyricum, et ædificaret non super alterius fundamentum, ubi jam fuerat prædicatum, sed usque ad Hispanias tenderet, et a Mari Rubro, imo ab Oceano usque ad Oceanum curreret; imitans Dominum suum et solem justitiæ."—HIERON. in Amos. l. 2. c. 5. Par. 1602, tom. v. col. 249.

<sup>4</sup> "Ut Evangelium Christi in Occidentis quoque partibus prædicaret."—HIERON. Catal. Script. Eccl. Opp. tom. i. col. 349.

<sup>5</sup> "Fuisti in ultima Occidentis insula."—CATULL. ad Cæsar. Carm.

doret accordingly asserts, that St. Paul brought salvation to the isles in the ocean<sup>1</sup>. Elsewhere he mentions the Britons among converts of the apostles<sup>2</sup>. In another place he says, that St. Paul, after his release from imprisonment, went to Spain, and thence carried the light of the Gospel to other nations<sup>3</sup>. In the sixth century, Venantius Fortunatus<sup>4</sup>, and in the seventh, Sophronius, patriarch of Jerusalem<sup>5</sup>, speak expressly of St. Paul's mission to Britain. Upon the whole, therefore, a native of our island may fairly consider the great apostle of the Gentiles as not improbably the founder of his national church<sup>6</sup>.

The Greek Menology asserts, that Aristobulus, saluted in the Epistle to the Romans<sup>7</sup>, being one of the seventy disciples, was ordained by St. Paul, bishop of the Britons; among whom, after much persecution, he established a church<sup>8</sup>. Pudens and Claudia likewise, greeted in the xxix. Stillingfleet (Antiqu. Brit. Ch. p. 38,) produces many other authorities to show that Britain was esteemed the extreme west.

<sup>1</sup> Καὶ εἰς τὰς Σπανίας ἀφίκετο, καὶ ταῖς ἐν τῷ πελάγει διακειμεναῖς νήσοις τὴν ὠφέλειαν προσήνεγκε.—B. THEOD. Interpr. in Psalm. 116. Opp. Lut. Par. 1642, tom. i. p. 871.

<sup>2</sup> Καὶ Βρετταννοὺς — καὶ ἀπαξαιπλῶς πᾶν ἔθνος καὶ γενὸς ἀνθρώπων δέξασθαι τοῦ σταυρωθέντος τοὺς νόμους ἀπέπεισαν.—THEODORET. Sermo. 9. de Legib. Opp. tom. iv. p. 610.

<sup>3</sup> Ὡς ἀθῶος ἀφείθη, καὶ τὰς Σπανίας κατέλαβε, καὶ εἰς ἕτερα ἔθνη δραμῶν, τὴν τῆς διδασκαλίας λαμπάδα προσήνεγκε.—THEOD. in Epist. 2. ad Timoth. Opp. tom. iii. p. 506.

<sup>4</sup> Apud USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. p. 4.

<sup>5</sup> Magdeburg. Centur. et alii. Ibid.

<sup>6</sup> Bp. Burgess, while he filled the see of St. David's, laid before the clergy of that diocess, in a very learned and able charge, the evidence for St. Paul's mission to Britain, and he thus states his own conviction upon the question: "We may finally conclude that the testimony respecting St. Paul's preaching in the utmost bounds of the west, that is, in Britain, is indisputable."—Tracts on the Origin and Independence of the Ancient British Church. Lond. 1815, p. 52.

<sup>7</sup> Rom. xvi. 10.

<sup>8</sup> "Aristobuli ad 15 diem Martii hujusmodi fit commemoratio:—Ὁυτος ἦν εἰς τῶν ἐβδομήκοντα,

Second Epistle to 'Timothy', have been identified with a married couple mentioned by Martial, of whom the lady was a Briton<sup>2</sup>. It is inferred, of course, that Claudia must have been zealous to spread that holy faith among her pagan countrymen, which she and her husband had happily embraced. Of all scriptural personages, however, Joseph of Arimathea has been most extensively regarded as the British apostle. Being despatched, we are told, from Gaul by St. Philip, he was allowed to fix himself with twelve companions at Glastonbury, then ordinarily called the isle of Avalon<sup>3</sup>. Against this relation, though long undisputedly current, a fatal objection arises from the silence of Saxon authorities. Glastonbury was a place renowned for sanctity many generations before the Norman conquest; indeed, probably from the most μαθητῶν, ἠκολούθησε δὲ τῷ ἁγίῳ ἀποστόλῳ Παύλῳ, κηρύττων τὸ Ἐυαγγέλιον εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην διακονῶν αὐτῷ. ὑφ' οὗ καὶ χειροτονεῖται ἐπίσκοπος εἰς τὴν τῶν Βρετανῶν χώραν, ἀγριῶν καὶ ὠμοτάτων παρ' ὧν ποτὲ μὲν τυπτόμενος, ποτὲ δὲ καὶ κατὰ τῆς ἀγορᾶς συρόμενος, πολλοὺς ἐπεισε τῷ Χριστῷ προσελθεῖν ὅθεν καὶ ἐκκλησίας συστησάμενος, καὶ πρεσβυτέρους καὶ διακόνους ἐν αὐτῇ καταστήσας, ἐτελειώθη.—

USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. 5.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Tim. iv. 21.

<sup>2</sup> "Claudia, Rufe, meo nubit peregrina Pudenti."—MART. lib. iv. epigr. 13. ad Ruf. The particular country of this foreign lady appears from the following passage in another epigram:

"Claudia cœruleis cum sit Rufina
Britannis
Edita, quam Latiae pectora plebis habet."
Id. lib. xi. epigr. 53.

<sup>3</sup> "Sanctus autem Philippus, ut testatur Freculphus, lib. ii. cap. 4, regionem Francorum adiens, gratia prædicandi, plures ad fidem convertit ac baptizavit. Volens igitur verbum Christi dilatari, duodecim ex suis discipulis elegit, et ad evangelizandum verbum vitæ misit in Britanniam: quibus, ut ferunt, charissimum amicum suum, Joseph ab Arimathia, qui et Dominum sepelivit, præfecit. Venientes igitur in Britanniam, anno ab incarnatione Domini sexagesimo tertio, ab assumptione beatæ Mariæ decimo quinto, fidem Christi fiducialiter prædicabant. Rex autem barbarus cum sua gente tam nova audiens et inconsueta, omnino prædicationi eorum consentire renuebat, nec paternas traditiones commutare volebat: quia tamen de longe venerant, vitæque eorum exigebat modestia, quandam insulam ad petitionem eorum, sylvis, rubis, atque paludibus circumda-

remote antiquity<sup>1</sup>. Encompassed by watery marshes and sluggish streams, its British name was Ynys vitryn, the Glassy Isle. Among pagans, islands commonly bore a sacred character, and Christian teachers were naturally willing to avail themselves of this; especially where it had provided suitable erections. The isle of Avalon was probably thus recommended<sup>2</sup>. It is likely that Druidism had left there, on its extinction, a residence desirable for the now triumphant Christian teachers, and had rendered their labours more generally acceptable by the sanctity with which it had long distinguished the abode thus provided to their hands. On the Saxon invasion, Avalon's water-locked recesses were adapted for sheltering a congregation of native Christians, and a wattled church of tam, ab incolis Ynis-witryn nuncupatam, in lateribus suæ regionis ad habitandum concessit."—MALMESB. De Antiqu. Glaston. Eccl. xv. Scriptores. Oxon. 1691, p. 292.

<sup>1</sup> "In ea" (Glestonia, sc.) "siquidem ipsius loci primi catholicæ legis neophytæ antiquam dō dicante repererunt ecclesiam, nulla hominum arte constructam, immo humanæ salutis celitus patratam." (Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Cleopatra. b. 13. f. 61.) This extract is made from an octavo volume of high antiquity, and of uncommon interest; the life of Dunstan, which supplies the citation above, having been written by a contemporary, and the particular MS. having been consulted by William of Malmesbury, Josselin (who compiled, under Abp. Parker's direction, the Antiquitates Britannicæ), and Abp. Ussher. These curious facts appear from the following entries in contemporary hands. f. 58:

"Hunc librum, cuius auctor, ut

apparebit lectori, claruit tempore ipsius Dunstani, de quo agit, reperi inter veteres libros manuscritos monasterii Augustinensis Cant. anno Dñi 1565, mens. August.—JOA. JOSSELINUS.

"Ibi hunc ipsum librum a Guilielmo Malmesburiensi repertum esse; ex libro ejusdem de Antiquitate Glastoniensis monasterii apparebit.—JA. USSERUS."

<sup>2</sup> From the following passage in the MS. cited above, f. 63, it might seem that Glastonbury was famed for sanctity so early as the fifth century. Otherwise it is not likely that St. Patrick would have fixed himself there, and that he should be thought to have died there.

"Porro Hibernensium peregrini per dictum locum Glestoniæ, sicut et cæteræ fidelium turbæ magno colebant affectu, et maxime ob beati Patricii senioris honorem; qui faustus ibidem in Dño quiescisse narratur."

their erection, found there apparently, at a subsequent period, might have been used by the invaders on their own conversion<sup>1</sup>. Had this ancient place of worship been thought to possess pretensions of a character yet more illustrious, it is by no means likely that Saxon veneration for the spot would have overlooked them. We may, therefore, not unreasonably conclude that Joseph of Arimathea's connection with Glastonbury depends upon no tradition anterior to those Norman times<sup>2</sup>, from which it has descended to posterity.

As much less uncertainty attaches to the date of Britain's conversion than to the names of her evangelists, the case of Lucius can hardly claim the importance often assigned to it. This king of Britain, we are informed, was impressed so much in favour of Christianity, that he sent Eluan and Medwin to Eleutherius, the Roman bishop, for further instruction<sup>3</sup>. His ambassadors are said to have been courteously entertained in Rome, instructed in the faith of Jesus, baptized, and finally ordained. On returning home, Lucius is represented to have received baptism by their persuasions, and to have

---

<sup>1</sup> "Ecclesia de qua loquimur (Glest. sc.), quæ per antiquitatem sui celeriter ab Anglis ealde circe, id est, vetusta Ecclesia, nuncupatur, primo virgea."—SPELM. Conc. i. p. 17.

<sup>2</sup> "It seems to be a little suspicious, at first view, that so considerable a part of the antiquities of this church should be wholly past by, by the most ancient and inquisitive writers of our affairs; so that neither the true Gildas, nor Asserius, nor Marianus Scotus, nor any of the ancient annals, should take the least notice of this tradition" (respecting Joseph of Arimathea).—STILLINGFLEET'S Antiqu. of the Brit. Churches, p. 6.

<sup>3</sup> Bede (Eccl. Hist., i. 4, ed. Wheloc. p. 28) assigns this application of Lucius to some time within a short distance of the year 156. The alleged conversion, however, of this prince, is rather uncertain as to date. Abp. Ussher (Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. p. 20) has collected, from various writers, no fewer than twenty-three different dates, ranging from 137 to 199, to which that event has been referred.

founded a church in Britain, which flourished until the persecution of Diocletian<sup>1</sup>. These transactions have been referred to various dates; but hardly any authorities will allow us to consider them as anterior to the latter half of the second century. Lucius, then, must have been contemporary with Justin Martyr and Irenæus, and, at farthest, not more than a single generation removed from Tertullian. Now, in the time of the former writers, we have every reason to believe that Christianity had already taken root in Britain. Such is known to have been the fact in Tertullian's days. Lucius, therefore, might seem to have sought from a very distant quarter information which lay within his reach at home. It should, however, be observed, that no notice is taken of any demand for religious instruction in a letter of reply attributed to Eleutherius. From this he seems to have done no more than apply for authentic particulars of Roman jurisprudence<sup>2</sup>. Although it may, then, be probable that some petty prince, styled in Latin Lucius, was among the earlier of British converts to Christianity, yet he can hardly have been contemporary with its introduction to the island. If any, therefore, would fain derive his conversion from papal intervention, and claim authority for the Roman see over every church which its prelates

<sup>1</sup> BED., i. 4, p. 28.

<sup>2</sup> See a translation of it in Collier's Eccl. Hist., i. 14. It is a very suspicious document, upon several accounts, especially as to antiquity, not being "met with till a thousand years after Eleutherius's death, and where it was first found is altogether uncertain. The author of the Customs of London printed it in the twelfth year of Henry VIII.; afterwards Lambert inserted it among the laws of Edward the Confessor: but here it is printed in an italic letter, as a mark of its being spurious. Hoveden's manuscripts, of about four hundred years' standing, take no notice of it; and, which is remarkable, his contemporary, Geoffrey of Monmouth, who did not use to suppress or overlook any British antiquities, says nothing about it."

—COLLIER.

have planted, they must fail of establishing such a claim over Britain from this alleged transaction.

The care, universally marking primitive Christianity, to provide a bishop for every church<sup>1</sup>, necessarily connects the stream of British prelacy with apostolic times. National confusions, by destroying evidence, have, indeed, prevented modern Britain from ascertaining the earliest links in the chain of her episcopal succession. But it is satisfactory to know that her prelates presented themselves upon the first occasion likely to furnish an authentic record of their appearance. Constantine, desirous of terminating the Donatistic schism, convened a council at Arles<sup>2</sup>. The signatures of three British bishops are appended to the canons there enacted<sup>3</sup>.

Subsequently, when the younger Constantine and his brother Constans endeavoured to secular religious unity by summoning the principal ecclesiastics to Sardica, this council also was attended by British bishops<sup>4</sup>. Several of that body likewise obeyed the mandate of Constantius, in attending the council of Ariminium, holden a few years later in the fourth century<sup>5</sup>. Nor has it been <sup>1</sup> Ὁ χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, καὶ τῶν διακόνων τί πράσσω, ὁ τοιοῦτος μεμλάνται τῇ συνειδήσει, καὶ ἔστιν ἀπίστου χείρων.—IGNAT. ad Trall. inter Mon. S. PP. p. 10.

<sup>2</sup> In 314, LABB. et COSS. i. 1422.

<sup>3</sup> "Eborius episcopus, de civitate Eboracensi, provincia Britannia.

"Restitutus episcopus, de civitate Londinensi, provincia superscripta.

"Adelfius episcopus, de civitate Colonia Londinensium, exinde sacerdos presbyter: Arminius diaconus."—Ibid. 1430.

By Civitas Colonia Londinensium, it is hardly doubtful that Colchester is to be understood.

<sup>4</sup> The Council of Sardica was holden in 347. For the attendance of British bishops there, see Ussher (Brit. Eccl. Antiqu.), p. 105.

<sup>5</sup> "Ita missis per Illyricum, Italiam, Aphricam, Hispanias, Galliasque, magistris officialibus, acciti ac in unum coacti quadringenti et aliquanto amplius occidentales episcopi, Ariminium convenere; quibus omnibus annonas et cellaria dare Imperator præceperat: sed id nostris, id est, Aquitanis, Gallis, ac Britannis, indecens vi-considered otherwise than highly probable, that episcopal delegates from Albion were among that most illustrious assembly, the first council of Nice<sup>1</sup>.

Before Britain thus appeared among ecclesiastical authorities, her constancy was severely tried in the fire of persecution. In common with other parts of the Roman empire, she suffered under that insane and atrocious policy by which Diocletian glutted the vengeance of baffled Paganism. It was during this gloomy reign of terror that St. Alban obtained the crown of martyrdom. When the persecution began, he was a Pagan, but his humanity would not allow him to refuse an asylum under his roof to a proscribed Christian priest. While hospitably sheltered there, the pious clergyman's religious fervour so effectually won Alban's veneration, that he readily received instruction in the faith of Jesus. At length the priest's retreat was discovered; but Alban, now a zealous Christian, had become bent upon saving him at every hazard. He dressed himself in his clothes, and thus disguised, was dragged before the Roman governor. The deception being discovered, he was bidden to choose between sacrifice to the gods, and his fugitive friend's intended punishment. The answer was, an immovable declaration against any insult to his holy faith. Scourging being tried in vain, he suffered decapitation. He resided at Verulam, or Werlamester, as the Saxons eventually called it. The place of his martyrdom was the hill overlooking the spot then occupied by that sum, repudiatis fiscalibus, propriis sumptibus vivere maluerunt. Tres tantum ex Britannia, inopia proprii, publico usi sunt, cum oblatam a cæteris collationem respuissent: sanctius putantes fiscum gravare, quam singulos."—SULPICII SEVERI Hist. Sacr. L. ii. inter Mon. S. PP. p. 539.

---

<sup>1</sup> USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiq. p. 105.

ancient city. Here, in after-times, arose the noble abbey of St. Alban's, a worthy commemoration of Britain's earliest blood-stained testimony against Gentile errors. After Alban's example, many other members of the ancient British church surrendered their lives rather than deny their Saviour<sup>1</sup>. Thus, in Britain, as elsewhere, Diocletian's persecution, though serving to render Paganism odious and contemptible, by an exhibition of vindictive rage and impotent intolerance; enabled Christianity, after displaying numerous examples of heroic self-denial, to emerge from a stormy time of trial, more vigorous and illustrious than ever.

Old churches, accordingly, were soon repaired, new ones built, and Christians, who had timidly concealed themselves during the persecution, again came forward, bringing from their hiding-places an ardent zeal to spread the faith of Jesus<sup>2</sup>. Constantine's accession followed shortly after; when Britain became the seat of a flourishing and extensive church. During the progress of its complete establishment, Arianism distracted the Christian world. This heresy appears to have been slow in reaching the British shores<sup>3</sup>. At length, seemingly when the fourth century was verging towards a close<sup>4</sup>, Arius,

<sup>1</sup> Hom. in Pass. S. Alban. ap. WHELOC. in Bed. p. 36.

<sup>2</sup> "Nam qui superfuerunt, sylvis ac desertis, abditisque speluncis se occultaverunt, expectantes a justo rectore omnium Deo carnificibus severa quandoque judicia, sibi vero animarum tutamina. Igitur bilustro supradicti turbinis, necdum adimpleto ad integrum, marcescentibusque nece suorum auctorum nefariis edictis, lætis luminibus omnes already popular in other divisions of the Christian world, found followers in the church of Albion<sup>1</sup>.

Christi tyrones, quasi post hyemalem ac prolixam noctem, temperiem, lucemque serenam auræ cælestis excipiunt. Renovant ecclesias ad solum usque destructas, basilicas sanctorum martyrum fundant, construunt, perficiunt."—GILD. de Excid. Brit. p. 18.

<sup>3</sup> STILLINGFLEET. Antiqu. Brit. Ch. p. 175.

<sup>4</sup> USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. p. 106.

An entrance being thus afforded to a spirit of rash vain-glorious disputation, another enemy to religious peace quickly took advantage of the breach. Pelagius, probably called Morgan among his countrymen, by birth a Briton<sup>2</sup>, following the prevailing fashion, resolved upon a residence in Rome. Piety and mortification, with considerable abilities, quickly gained him there a high degree of credit. With learning, he was, indeed, inadequately provided. His principal companion and warmest admirer was Celestius, an Irishman of great subtlety and readiness of wit. Unfortunately for both these insular ascetics, they became acquainted with Rufinus, who, after having resided in the East for thirty years, had returned into his native Italy deeply tinctured with Origen's peculiar opinions. From this eminent, though injudicious, acquaintance, Pelagius and Celestius learned to doubt the doctrine of original sin. They soon proceeded to reason against the necessity of divine grace for fulfilling the will of God. These principles, at first, were cautiously proposed, in conversation chiefly, and rather as questions deserving a fuller examination than they had hitherto

---

<sup>1</sup> "Mansit namque hæc Christi capitis membrorumque consonantia suavis, donec Arriana perfidia atrox ceu anguis, transmarina nobis evomens venena, fratres in unum habitantes exitiabile faceret se-jungi; ac sic quasi via facta, trans oceanum, omnes omnino bestię feræ mortiferum cujuslibet hæreseos virus horrido ore vibrantes, letalia dentium vulnera patriæ novi semper aliquid audire volenti, et nihil certe stabiliter obtinenti, infigebant."—GILD. de Excid. Brit. p. 19.

<sup>2</sup> "Pelagius Brito."—BED. Eccl. Hist. i. 10, p. 51.

"Patrio nomine Morgan dictum fuisse aiunt. Morgan autem Britannis Marigenam, sive Pelago ortum denotat: unde et Latinum Pelagii deductum est vocabulum."—USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. p. 112.

received, than as positions entitled to implicit confidence'. By mooted them, however, often and shrewdly, Pelagius acquired a new hold upon popular attention. To say nothing of their novelty, his doctrines were welcomed by human pride. To arrest their progress, St. Austin laboriously employed his powerful pen. The controversy naturally drew from him strong assertions of grace and predestination: these have occasioned, in modern times, many exulting appeals to his authority. Such passages, however, are probably largely indebted for their force to the strong recoil of ardent passions, and a vigorous intellect wound up in the heat of argument.

After their ill-famed celebrity was gained, neither Pelagius nor Celestius appears to have revisited the British isles. Their opinions, however, were introduced; chiefly by means of Agricola, son of Severianus, a Gallic bishop. Auxiliaries of native origin, it might seem, seconding Agricola's endeavours, Pelagianism soon became extensively popular in Britain. The leading ecclesiastics remained firm to their ancient principles; but their opposition to the tide of innovation proving insufficient, they requested assistance from the neighbouring church of Gaul. The summons was answered in the persons of Germanus, bishop of Auxerre, and Lupus, bishop of Troyes. These able prelates, by their eloquence in the pulpit, by their influence in private society, and by the arguments which they used in a council convoked at Verulam, succeeded in imposing silence upon the Pelagian party. They then returned to the Continent. On their departure, British Pelagianism revived, and the native clergy, again despairing of its extinction by their own unaided powers, implored Germanus to pay our island a second visit. The pious bishop of Auxerre, listening readily to this application, took with him Severus, bishop of Treves, a disciple of his former coadjutor, and set sail for Britain. Upon this occasion, as before, the preaching, arguments, and persuasions of the foreign prelates were followed by the complete abasement of Pelagianism. The visitors, however, now were not to be satisfied until they had made effectual provision for perpetuating their triumph. They persuaded their insular friends to act upon an edict of Valentinian, and drive into exile the teachers whose innovating doctrines had caused so much dissension<sup>1</sup>.

---

<sup>1</sup> USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. p. 110. The Pelagian heresy seems to have arisen about the year 400. (Ibid. 114.) For the doctrines of Pelagius, this work of Abp. Ussher may be consulted, pp. 117, 122, 123, 129, 170.

Soon afterwards the British Church was grievously despoiled of her ancient splendour. The country, abandoned by its Roman masters, became a prey to domestic faction, and to predatory movements of barbarian tribes, occupying its northern regions. Intolerable miseries, from this latter cause, impelled the harassed and pusillanimous authorities of southern Britain to seek assistance from some restless and intrepid soldiers of fortune, then wandering, as it seems, in quest of plunder<sup>2</sup>. This impolitic and disgraceful call was promptly answered. The foreign warriors immediately became highly serviceable, and having recommended more extensive invitations to their countrymen, such a force was formed as quickly drove the Picts and Scots back to their mountain-fastnesses. But the victors now cast a longing eye upon the

---

<sup>1</sup> USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiqu. 176.
STILLINGFLEET. Antiqu. Br. Ch. 194.

<sup>2</sup> TURNER. Hist. Angl.-Saxons. Lond. 1828, i. 254.

fair fields delivered by their valour. A prize, so noble and unprotected, naturally proved a temptation too great for the cupidity of mere pirates<sup>1</sup>. The bold auxiliaries became invaders, nor did they cease to struggle, until the miserable remains of British power were driven from every seat of its long established glory, into quarters of the island, remote, inaccessible, and comparatively worthless.

---

<sup>1</sup> “Statuunt inter se dividere victores alienigenæ insulam bonis omnibusfecundissimam: indignum judicantes eam ignavorum dominio detineri, que ad defensionem suam idoneis posset prebere sufficientem alimoniam, et optimis viris.”—
 ABBO. FLORIANCENSIS. Passio Sancti Eadmundi. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Digby. 109, p. 4.

ANGLO-SAXON ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

---

CHAPTER I. FROM AUGUSTINE TO THEODORE.

597—669.

THE ANGLO-SAXONS—OBSTACLES TO THEIR CONVERSION—ETHELBERT AND BERTHA—GROWING DISPOSITION TOWARDS CHRISTIANITY—GREGORY THE GREAT—AUGUSTINE—SUCCESS OF HIS MISSION—CLAIMS MIRACULOUS POWERS—PROPOSES QUESTIONS TO GREGORY—INEFFECTUALLY ENDEAVOURS TO UNDERMINE THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE ANCIENT BRITISH CHURCH—TEMPORARY CONVERSION OF ESSEX—LAURENTIUS—TEMPORARY CONVERSION OF NORTHUMBRIA—CONVERSION OF EAST ANGLIA—FINAL CONVERSION OF NORTHUMBRIA—CONVERSION OF MERCIA—FINAL CONVERSION OF ESSEX—FURSEY—CONVERSION OF WESSEX—CONVERSION OF SUSSEX—TRIUMPH OF THE ROMAN PARTY IN NORTHUMBRIA—DOCTRINES.

ANGLO-SAXON Ecclesiastical History admits of an advantageous distribution into four several portions. The first exhibits a nation passing from Paganism to Christianity, and a foreign church striving for ascendancy over one of native growth. The second embraces a period in which ancient England made her most conspicuous intellectual progress, and in which were laid securely the foundations of an ecclesiastical establishment. The third is rendered interesting by the splendid services of Alfred, but it paints an age of national distress, and of literary declension. The fourth is also deeply marked by civil difficulties, and prevailing ignorance. Dunstan has, however, given it a peculiar character, by planting the Benedictine system among Englishmen. Immediately began a serious interference with vested rights, the natural parent of obstinate dissension.

The Anglo-Saxon people sprang from three piratical tribes, of Gothic origin. Two of these were seated in the neck of the Cimbric Chersonese, now known as Jutland, and in three islands off its western coast<sup>1</sup>. The Jutes lived, probably, within that peninsula. The emigration of their tribe does not, however, seem to have been extensive, its British settlements being confined to Kent, the Isle of Wight, and the southern part of Hampshire<sup>2</sup>. The Angles, whose continental home lay in the modern districts of Sleswick and Holstein<sup>3</sup>, emigrated entirely<sup>4</sup>, and spreading over the north-eastern, midland, and northern counties of South Britain, eventually gave name to the whole country. The Saxons, nearest neighbours of these, as coming from that region, between the Eyder and the Elbe, called Old Saxony by our ante-Norman ancestors<sup>5</sup>, found new abodes in Essex, Middlesex, and in those countries west of Kent, which lie between the Thames and the Channel. That the Angles, no less than the Saxons, were descended from the Teuinter Saxones et Giotas, habens oppidum capitale, quod sermone Saxonico Slesuic nuncupatur, secundum vero Danos, Hailhaby."—Chronicum Ethelwerdi, ed. Savile: inter Scriptores post Bedam. Lond. 1596, f. 474.

<sup>1</sup> North Strandt, Busen, and Heiligland, or Heligoland. The last of these, now reduced by repeated incursions of the ocean to a mere rock, was anciently of much greater extent than it is at present.—History of the Anglo-Saxons, by SHARON TURNER, F.A.S. Lond. 1828, i. 114.

<sup>2</sup> BEDÆ Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum. Ed. Wheloc. Cant. 1643, p. 58. Dr. INGRAM'S Saxon Chronicle, Lond. 1823, p. 14.

<sup>3</sup> "Porro Anglia vetus sita est

<sup>4</sup> "Anglia, which has ever since remained waste." (Sax. Chr. 15.) Perhaps, however, this language is not to be understood quite literally, for Bede qualifies it by perhibetur.

<sup>5</sup> BED. 58.

tonic branch of the Gothic family, not the Scandinavian, is attested sufficiently by the Anglo-Saxon tongue. This could hardly fail of exhibiting a closer affinity with the modern Icelandic, had the tribe most conspicuous in planting it on British ground, owned perfect identity of origin with nations yet inhabiting the north-western extremities of continental Europe. Anglo-Saxon, however, is a language assimilating rather with German than Icelandic<sup>1</sup>.

All these invading tribes were Pagans. Nor were the earlier years of their settlement in Britain favourable to their adoption of the Christian creed. It is true, that the people whose fair possessions lured them from their Scandinavian abodes, had risen into opulence under an abandonment of Gentile errors. This people was aroused, however, into a long course of sanguinary conflict with its treacherous invaders, when it found itself menaced by them with nothing short of slavery or extermination. Hence, during considerably more than a century from Hengist's arrival, South Britain was unceasingly distracted by the various miseries of intestine war<sup>2</sup>. Such a season

---

<sup>1</sup> "That the Angles were a Teutonic race is not only probable, but almost certain, from the fact that the dialect of these invaders so soon coalesced into one common tongue, and assumed a character so decidedly Teutonic, that, with the exception of a few Normanisms, introduced in later times, there is scarcely a vestige deserving notice of the old Scandinavian, or of Danish structure, to be found in the Anglo-Saxon."—Preface to RASK'S Anglo-Saxon Grammar, translated by THORPE. Copenhagen, 1830, p. 12.

<sup>2</sup> Hengist did not establish himself in the kingdom of Kent until after the battle of Aylesford, fought in 455, in which battle his brother Horsa was slain. Thus, as these two brothers first lent their dangerous aid in 449, six agitated years, at least, elapsed between the period of their arrival in Britain, and that of their nation's earliest rational prospect of a secure establishment within the island. (Sax. Chr. 15. ETHELWERD. Script. post Bed. 474.) The Britons did not abandon Kent until after the battle of Crayford, obviously denies a field to missionary zeal. It is, therefore, probable that the native clergy made no attempt, while their nation yet struggled for existence, to humanise its unrelenting enemies by communicating to them a knowledge of the Gospel. The Pagan warriors were besides likely to draw new prejudices against Christianity from the very success which usually waited upon their arms. Britain's trust in the Cross had not secured her fortunes from constant declension: reliance upon Woden had been encouraged unceasingly by victory. A people unpractised in sound argumentation, and unacquainted with true religion, would hence infer that its own deities were more kind, and probably more powerful also, than those of its opponents. Vainly would Christianity solicit favourable notice from such minds thus prepossessed. A considerable change must be wrought in the whole frame of a society like this, before it could be gained over to calm reflection upon the religion of a people prostrate under its assaults.

No sooner had Providence effected such a change,

---

two years later. Nor subsequently did they cease to contend vigorously with the unwelcome colonists. Of these intruders, however, a new body succeeded in planting itself in Sussex, under Ella, soon after 477, the year in which it landed there. In 495, Cerdic landed (probably in Hampshire), and he was enabled eventually to lay the foundations of the kingdom of Wessex; but it was not until after an arduous struggle of twenty-four years. Nor was it then, until after the lapse of about seventy years, that his descendants pushed their conquests to the Somerset-	shire Avon and the Severn. While this protracted warfare was raging in the south; the east, the north, and the middle of England were successively overrun by Saxons and Angles; principally by the latter. Nor was it before the year 586 that this latter people founded the great midland kingdom of Mercia. Even then, however, the British spirit was not subdued: a few sanguinary contests, occurring at intervals afterwards, plainly showing that the new comers were necessitated to continue upon the alert against the hostility of the people whom they had dispossessed.
---	---

than England, happily, could take full advantage of it. Her principal monarch then was Ethelbert, king of Kent; a prince whose authority reached the Humber<sup>1</sup>, and who, under the designation of Bretwalda<sup>2</sup>, enjoyed an admitted precedence over all the Anglo-Saxon potentates. This powerful sovereign appears to have ascended his father's throne, about the year 560<sup>3</sup>, and probably ten years

<sup>1</sup> BED. ed. Wheloc. l. i. c. 25, p. 75. Ethelbert, probably, had extorted a tributary acknowledgment, or some other mark of subserviency, from all the petty princes established to the south of the Humber. Malmesbury (Script. post. Bed. Lond. 1596, 6, 4), speaks of him as having subdued all the Anglo-Saxon nations, except the Northumbrians. But Bede's words hardly seem to bear a construction so wide.

<sup>2</sup> The Saxon Chronicle (p. 88) says that Ethelbert was the third Anglo-Saxon prince thus distinguished. Ella, king of Sussex, was the first, and Egbert, king of Wessex, the last Bretwalda. Of this designation it seems impossible to define the exact import. Mr. Turner has shown that it could not have arisen from an absolute conquest over the contemporary sovereigns. That it implied, however, a considerable degree of influence over the whole, or the greater part of England, must necessarily follow from the language of Bede. See Hist. of Angl.-Sax. i. 331.

<sup>3</sup> Bede's text is made to say that Ethelbert died in the year 613, after a reign of fifty-six years (l. ii. c. 5, p. 119). This account throws his accession back to the year 557. This is the year, accordingly, assigned to that event by the Saxon Chronicle (p. 25). But the ancient chronicler here makes Ethelbert to have reigned no more than fifty-three years. According to this portion of his narrative, therefore, the Kentish Bretwalda must have died in 610. Afterwards, however (p. 30), the Saxon Chronicle makes Ethelbert to have died in 616, and to have reigned fifty-six years. With these dates Henry of Huntingdon agrees. (Scriptores post Bed. f. 187.) Malmesbury contents himself with remarking the discrepancy between the ancient authorities, and desiring his readers to form their own opinion as to the facts. (Ibid. f. 4.) Had he known King Alfred's translation of Bede, he would have been at no loss to decide upon the subject himself. That illustrious remnant of our great monarch's literary labours makes Ethelbert to have died about the year 616. Now, as Alfred follows his author's printed text in assigning a reign of fifty-six years to the celebrated king of Kent, there can be little doubt, that by Malmesbury's time, some error had crept into the MSS. of Bede, and that, according to the venerable writer's original statements, Ethelbert really died about the year 616, after a reign of fifty-six years.

afterwards', he married Bertha, daughter of Cherebert, king of Paris. This princess, coming of a Christian family, was not allowed to pass over into Kent until ample stipulations had been made for the free profession of her holy faith. She came, accordingly, attended by Luidhard, a Frankish bishop, and for her accommodation, a British church, erected in honour of St. Martin, on the eastern side of Canterbury, but long desecrated, was again rendered suitable for Christian worship. Thus when the sixth century had, perhaps, thirty years to run, a Christian congregation was formed in the principal seat of Anglo-Saxon power. Nor, as its leading member was the most illustrious female in the island, can we reasonably suppose that it long failed of making converts. Hence it became understood at Rome, that among Englishmen an anxious desire prevailed for admission within the Church of Christ<sup>2</sup>. How far any such anxiety had affected Ethelbert personally, there are no direct means of ascertaining. But Gregory the Great, from whose epistles we learn the bias of his people, intimates to Bertha, that she ought early to have inclined him favourably<sup>3</sup> towards her own religion. As this intimation occurs <sup>1</sup> Inett considers Ethelbert to have married "about the year 570." This is not unlikely, as he came young to the throne, and required a few years to attain that importance which rendered him an eligible match for the Frankish princess.

<sup>2</sup> "Pervenit ad nos Anglorum gentem ad fidem Christianam, Deo miserante, desideranter velle converti." (GREGORII PP. I. Epist. 58, l. v. Labb. et Coss. tom. v. col. 1244.) "Indicamus ad nos pervenisse Anglorum gentem, Deo annuente, velle fieri Christianam." —Ejusd. Epist. 59. Ibid.)

The former of these epistles is addressed to Theodoric, and Theodebert, kings of the Franks; the latter, to Brunichild, queen of that nation. The object of both epistles is to recommend Augustine, on his passage through Gaul, to the favourable consideration of these royal personages. Mrs. Elstob has printed English translations of these epistles in the appendix to the homily on St. Gregory's day.

<sup>3</sup> "Et quidem jamdudum glo-

amidst a mass of compliment, it is, probably, mere allusion to a fact, sufficiently known, but unfit for public mention. Of Ethelbert's politic temper, influence beyond his patrimonial territories is an undeniable evidence. Such a man's habitual prudence would restrain him from a hasty avowal of an important change in his religious opinions. Nor, after his formal conversion, would he fail of wishing that a secret, laying him open to a charge of dissimulation, should not be needlessly divulged. Had not Ethelbert, however, long looked upon Christianity with an approving eye, it is most unlikely that, when publicly called upon to embrace it, he should so readily have obeyed the summons<sup>1</sup>.

riosis filii nostri, conjugis vestri, animos prudentiæ vestræ bono, sicut revera Christianæ, debuistis inflectere, ut pro regni et animæ suæ salute fidem quam colitis sequeretur." (GREG. PP. I. Epist. 59, lib. 9.) A translation of this Epistle is in Mrs. Elstob's Appendix, p. 18.

<sup>1</sup> Bede says (L. ii. c. 5, p. 120), that Ethelbert died twenty-one years after he had received the Christian faith. The venerable author's royal translator, Alfred, goes farther; adding that the Kentish Bretwalda died at this interval, after his baptism. His death, however, took place, it seems, in 616. He might, therefore, have become a Christian in 595. The Saxon Chronicle, however, assigns the arrival of Augustine to 596, and Bede (L. i. c. 23, p. 73,) says that it took place in the fourteenth year of the Emperor Maurice, and that that emperor acceded in 582. Bede's chronology, therefore, coincides with that of the Saxon Chronicle, and is, most probably, its authority. Hence, it seems, we must understand, not that Ethelbert died at the distance of twenty-one years complete from his conversion, but in the twenty-first year after that event. He must, accordingly, have been baptized almost immediately after the arrival of Augustine. John of Tinmouth, accordingly (Historia Aurea, Pars. 3, Bibl. Lameth. MS. 12. f. 7), says, Æthelbertus rex Cantie anno vicesimo-primo post fidei susceptionem, migravit ad Dominum. A splendid MS. containing Lives of Saints, in the Bodleian Library (MSS. Bodley, 285, f. 116), likewise says, Itaque post suscepto fidei sacramentū, cum per viginti et unum annos juxta examinationis lancem secundum equitatem divini juris temporalis regni scepra rite gubernaret, die vicesimo-septimo (no month mentioned), mundialibus rebus exemptus est.

From one of the more eminent of Roman bishops this happy summons flowed. Gregory, honourably distinguished among popes as the Great, sprang from an illustrious family, and inherited a papal fortune, his great-grandfather Felix having filled the opulent see of Rome. His early instruction was not altogether unworthy of hereditary affluence, and he proved an apt scholar. Yet Gregory lived and died ignorant of Greek, then a living language, necessary for understanding the best authors, and spoken vernacularly at his sovereign's court<sup>1</sup>. This deficiency might seem immaterial to one intended for a mere civilian, and his education was, probably, conducted with no other view, since he was appointed, at an early age, governor of Rome, his native city. He now was tried by one of those alloys which Providence mercifully uses for chastising the insolence of prosperity, and rebuking the envy of depression. His habitual state of health was miserable. Hence he soon anxiously sought an escape from public life, and an uninterrupted course of religious meditation: the only proper occupation, as it seemed, for a mind encased in a frame like his. He founded, accordingly, six monasteries in Sicily, and one in his native city. To this he himself retired. Rome resounded with the praise of such mortification and magnanimity. Hence he was not long left in the obscurity of his retreat. Pelagius II. ordained him deacon in 582, and sent him as apocrisiary to the imperial court<sup>2</sup>.

---

<sup>1</sup> Quamvis Græcæ linguæ nescius, he says of himself to Anastasius, an Isaurian presbyter. GREG. PP. I. Epist. 29, lib. vi. Labb. et Coss. v. 1274.

<sup>2</sup> Such officers were called Apocrisaries, because they returned the ἀποκρίσεις, answers, that is,

of their principals, to inquiries or proposals made at the several courts to which they were delegated. Ecclesiastical apocrisaries were ordinarily received at the court of Constantinople only from the patriarchal sees. Deacons were generally chosen for this

He remained at Constantinople, highly esteemed, until the death of Tiberius, in 586. It being usual that a new papal resident should wait upon a new emperor, Gregory then returned to Rome, bearing with him, in proof of satisfaction given by his mission, some of those wretched relics from which the Romish hierarchy has gathered so great a load of well-earned infamy, and the Romish laity such deep debasement. But although fully smitten by the prevailing spirit of superstition, he possessed a self-devoted spirit, worthy of the apostolic age. A raging pestilence filled Rome with mourning and consternation. Gregory braved the horrors of this avenging scourge, seeking to disarm the wrath of Heaven, and to mitigate popular distress, by solemn religious exercises. Under his guidance, all the citizens formed themselves into seven choirs, which perambulated their half-deserted streets, mournfully chanting penitential litanies. This noble disregard of every thing but duty, led grateful Rome to name him unanimously the successor of Pelagius, who had lately perished in the plague. Such elections, however, had no more than a conditional validity. Without imperial confirmation, they were void<sup>1</sup>. Gregory wrote to Constantinople, earnestly beseeching the denial of this. He determined also upon flight, and finding guards appointed to frustrate his intention, he was conveyed away, like St. Paul, in a basket, and sought the concealment of a wood. All these incidents naturally cast additional lustre upon his elevation. His messenger to the imperial court was intercepted, and in place of his office by the Roman pontiffs. DUCANGE in voc.

<sup>1</sup> "Nil enim tum a clero in eligendo pontifice actum erat, nisi

ejus electionem imperator approbasset."—PLATINA in Pelag. ii. ed. 1529, p. 65.

own letter, another was transmitted, earnestly supplicating the emperor to confirm the choice of Rome. This request found a ready acquiescence; and Gregory's retreat being easily discovered, he was joyously conducted to the pontifical chair.

Of this he became a very active occupant. His equanimity, however, was not proof against lofty pretensions in a rival see. John the Faster, bishop of Constantinople, a prelate almost adored in that capital, from his extreme rigour in ascetic mortifications, assumed, under imperial sanction, the title of Œcumenical bishop. Inconceivably offended, Gregory styled himself Servant of the servants of God<sup>1</sup>, an ostentation of humility yet retained by the princely pontiffs, though so long unruffled by Oriental arrogance. He reminded, also, the Emperor Maurice of St. Peter's high prerogatives, and yet, he added, that pillar of our faith is never called Universal Apostle. The Faster's assumption he paints as an insult to the priesthood, and a scandal to the Church<sup>2</sup>. He atteruntur, et mente turgemus. Corpus despectis vestibus tegitur, et elatione cordis purpuram superamus. Doctores humilium, duces superbiæ, ovina facie lupinos dentes abscondimus." It is not possible to acquit such language of gross intemperance, when applied to a person of strict morality, and of ascetic habits. Nor did Gregory here, in all probability, render justice to the Faster. That prelate was not likely to be an absolute hypocrite, and these words paint him as nothing else. That he was, however, much of a self-deceiver, there can be little question, and his case deserves the serious notice of every one who seems never to have forgiven Maurice for lacerating so severely his pride of station. When that emperor fell under the murderous hand of Phocas, the infamous usurper not only met with a ready recognition from the Romans, but also with fulsome compliments from their bishop'.

<sup>1</sup> "Superstitiosum Universalis vocabulum, quod Johannes, Constantinopolitanus antistes Episcopus insolenter sibi tunc temporis usurpabat, more antecessorum suorum Pontificum, sub districtissimæ interminationis sententia refutavit, et primus omnium se in principio epistolarum suarum SERVUM SERVORUM DEI scribi satis humiliter definivit."—Vita S. Greg. M. Auctore Paulo Diacono. Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. Lut. Par. 1668, i. 386.

<sup>2</sup> GREG. PP. I. Epist. iv. 32, ap. Labb. et Coss. v. 1181. In this epistle Gregory charges his rival, the Faster, with downright hypocrisy. He says, "Ossa jejuniis

As a counterpoise to the encroaching spirit of his Eastern rivals, Gregory naturally thought of extending the influence of his own authority in an opposite direction. Britain presented an inviting field. Her ancient Church, which in better days would probably have spurned any Roman attempt at interference, had been miserably curtailed by the Saxon conquest, in importance and extent. An auspicious opening was now offered, by means of Ethelbert and his Christian spouse, for raising on its ruins a new ecclesiastical establishment. Gregory, well aware of these advantages, judiciously determined upon improving them. His determination is referred by the earliest of our church historians to an impulse from may become acquainted with it. Had John really made those acquisitions in humility which were in accordance with his outward acts of mortification, he would not have given such violent offence to Gregory. He may serve, therefore, to remind us, that even under a striking appearance of extreme humility, men are very liable to overlook a most dangerous degree of pride within.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Aliquando vero cum misericors Deus mœrentium corda sua decrevit collatione refavere, unum ad regiminis culmen provehit, per cujus misericordiæ viscera in cunctorum mentibus exultationis suæ gratiam infundit. De qua exulta-

tionis abundantia roborari nos citius credimus, qui benignitatem vestræ pietatis ad imperiale fastigium pervenisse gaudemus. Lætenter cæli, et exaltet terra, et de vestris benignis actibus universæ reipublicæ populus nunc usque vehementer afflictus hilarescat." (GREG. PP. I. ad Phoc. Imp. Epist. 31, lib. xi. Lab. et Coss. v. 1530.) "Considerare cum gaudiis et magnis actionibus gratiarum libet, quantas omnipotenti Domino laudes debemus, quod remoto jugo tristitiæ ad libertatis tempora sub imperiali benignitatis vestræ pietate pervenimus."—Id. ad eund.—Ib. 1533.

on high<sup>1</sup>. Nor is this unreasonable. Providence undoubtedly often acts upon the minds of men, and orders their affairs, to further its own benevolent designs.

Political motives for Gregory's generous enterprise were not likely to be assigned, at any time, by those who deeply venerated the see of Rome. A garrulous and wonder-loving age could not refer it even to heavenly motions, without making them depend upon a striking incident. In Bede, after Gregory's history is finished and his epitaph recorded, appears the following tale<sup>2</sup>. While yet a private clergyman, this famous pontiff, passing through the slave-market of his native city, found his eye forcibly arrested by some light-haired, fair-complexioned youths, who stood exposed for sale. "Whence come these lads?" he asked. "From Britain:" was the answer. "Are the people Christians there?" he then inquired. "No: Pagans:" he was told. "Alas!" he said, "how grievous is it, that faces fair as these should own subjection to the swarthy devil!" His next question was, "What do you call the tribe from which these young people spring?" "Angles:" said the dealer. "Ah! that is well:" the future Pope rejoined. "Angels they are in countenance, and coheirs of angels they ought to be. Where in Britain do their kindred live?" "In Deira<sup>3</sup>:" was the reply. "Well again," Gregory said;

<sup>1</sup> BED. i. 23, p. 73.

<sup>2</sup> BED. ii. 1, p. 108. The venerable historian says that he received the story traditione majorum. It is detailed also in the Homily on the Birth-day of St. Gregory, published in the original Saxon, accompanied by an English translation, by Mrs. Elstob, in 1709, and by Paulus Diaconus.

—Vita S. GREG. Acta SS. Ord. Ben. i. 391.

<sup>3</sup> Dei ira means in Latin, God's anger. The Saxon district, known as Deira in Latin, was that portion of Northumbria which lay between the Humber and the Tees, and which was occasionally independent of Bernicia, the northern portion. The Saxons called

“it is our duty to deliver them from God's ire. Pray, who is king of the land so significantly named?” “Ella,” replied the merchant. “Ah!” the pious inquirer added, “Allelujah must be sung in that man's country.” Fired by this occurrence, Gregory resolved upon undertaking personally a mission into Anglia. Nor did the pope discourage his intention; but the Roman people would not allow their highly valued fellow citizen to enter upon a labour so remote and perilous. Thus Gregory is exhibited as bringing to the pontificate those benevolent intentions towards pagan Anglia, which were eventually realized under his direction. It is at least certain, that after his elevation he directed a priest named Candidus, manager of the papal patrimony in Gaul<sup>1</sup>, to buy some English lads of seventeen or eighteen, for education as missionaries among their countrymen<sup>2</sup>. This fact, probably, has brought Gregory himself upon the scene, to contrast his dark Italian hue with the bright complexion of a northern clime, and to point a dialogue with verbal play.

The prospect, however, of evangelizing Britain by means it Deora mægthe, or Deora rice, words meaning, there can be little doubt, the province, or kingdom of mild beasts (deer). It is likely that the form and pronunciation of this name, which a slave-dealer would probably give correctly enough, were not exactly suitable to the punning use of it placed in Gregory's mouth.

---

<sup>1</sup> “Churches in cities whose inhabitants were but of moderate substance, had no estates left to them out of their own district; but those in imperial cities, such as Rome, Ravenna, and Milan, where senators and persons of the first rank inhabited, were endowed with estates in divers parts of the world. St. Gregory mentions the patrimony of the Church of Ravenna, in Sicily, and another of the Church of Milan, in that kingdom. The Roman Church had patrimonies in France, Africk, Sicily, in the Cottian Alps, and in many other countries.”—F. PAUL'S Treatise of Ecclesiastical Benefices. Lond. 1736, p. 30.

<sup>2</sup> GREG. PP. I. Epist. v. 10. Labb. et Coss. v. 1217.

of young people to be educated expressly for the purpose, being distant and uncertain, Gregory's honourable zeal impelled him to think of a more expeditious course. He selected Augustine, prior of the monastery of St. Martin, in Rome, to lead a devoted band upon the mission which had fired his zeal, Augustine, having engaged several monks as partners in his toils, left the ancient capital of Europe, and made, it seems, his first considerable halt among the monastic recluses of Lerins. To these devotees the difficulties of his undertaking were necessarily better known than they could have been at Rome. At Lerins, accordingly, becoming utterly discouraged, he applied for Gregory's leave to withdraw from an enterprise apparently so hazardous and hopeless. But the pontiff would hear nothing of despondence. He rebuked the missionary's pusillanimity, refused to cancel his obligations, and commanded him to lose no time in reaching Britain, fully relying upon God's protection and support. Augustine now rallied his spirits, proceeded northwards, and providing himself with interpreters in Gaul<sup>1</sup>, set sail for the chalky cliffs of Kent. He landed in the isle of Thanet, and thence despatched a messenger to Ethelbert, informing him of his arrival, and declaring that he had journeyed thus far from home in hope of showing him the way to heaven<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> "Malmesburiensis nostri illam de communi utriusque gentis sermone observationem libet adjicere: naturalis lingua Francorum communicat cum Anglis; eo quod de Germania gentes ambæ germinaverunt: illa nimirum lingua, quam Franci transrhenani terunt: et qua Carolum magnum Francorum regem usum fuisse, ex Vita ipsius paulo ante confirmaverat.—Quo minus mirum videri nobis debeat, quod a Beda proditum invenimus, Augustinum et socios, conversionis Anglorum opus aggressos, accepisse, præcipiente Papa Gregorio, de gente Francorum interpretes."—USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiq. 222.

<sup>2</sup> Augustine appears to have re-

By the Kentish prince, however well the message might have pleased him, it was cautiously received. He gave no permission to his Roman guests for a farther advance into the country, until he had gone himself to make observations. Augustine's arrangements for this royal visit did honour to his knowledge of human nature. Forming a procession of his monks, one of whom bore a silver cross, another a picture of the Saviour, while the remainder chanted litanies, he came forward into the Bretwalda's presence. Ethelbert might have really felt some fears of magic. None, probably, around him were above such apprehensions, and at all events over-haste in approving the Roman mission was very far from politic. Augustine's first reception, accordingly, was in the open air; magic arts being thus considered less likely to take effect. The prior disclaimed any other object than to guide the king, and all his people, to everlasting joys above. These it was the privilege of his ministry to promise, on conversion. "Fair words and promises," Ethelbert replied, "but still new and uncertain. I cannot relinquish for them what my countrymen have long and universally professed. Your distant pilgrimage, however, and charitable purpose of offering us a boon, so highly valued by yourselves, justly claim our hospitality. I shall, therefore, provide you with a residence, and means of living. Nor do I restrain you from endeavours to spread your opinions among my people." The residence provided was at Canterbury, and the missionaries entered that city to take possession of it, with all those imposing solemnities of the cross, the picture, and the chanted litany, which had dignified their introduction

---

ceived his commission from Gregory in 596, and to have landed in Kent in 597.—WHARTON de Vera Success. Archiep. Cantuar. Angl. Sacr. i. p. 89.

to the Bretwalda. Of their speedy success there are abundant assurances. Ethelbert, probably long a concealed Christian, seems to have openly professed himself a convert soon after their arrival. Nor, obviously, could such an example fail of operating extensively upon the people.

When sufficiently established, and attended by a considerable congregation in the ancient church of St. Martin, Augustine felt his time come for venturing upon a more extensive field. His instructions, and those principles of ecclesiastical polity which had ever guided Christians, forbade arrangements of a more diffusive character, until the formal assumption of episcopal functions. He seems, accordingly, to have crossed over into Gaul, and to have advised with Virgilius, archbishop of Arles<sup>1</sup>, upon a public appearance as metropolitan of the et coepiscopum nostrum Augustinum." The second thus speaks of Augustine, to Eulogius, bishop of Alexandria: "Qui, data a me licentia, a Germaniarum episcopis episcopus factus, cum eorum quoque solatiis, ad prædictam gentem (Anglorum, sc.) in finem mundi perductus est." Guided by these authorities, Wharton reasonably concludes that Thorn rightly placed Augustine's consecration in 597, the very year of his arrival in Kent. If, therefore, he went subsequently over to Virgilius, it must have been to advise with him, not to receive consecration, as Bede relates. Bede's text calls the archbishop of Arles, Etherius. But this is an error. Etherius was bishop of Lyons, and the error lies in the name of the prelate, not in that of the diocese.—STEVENSON'S Bede. Lond. 1838, p. 51.

<sup>1</sup> "Neque Londinensis, neque Cantuariensis Archiepiscopus, sed universali nomine Anglorum Episcopus creabatur, ut liberum sibi sit, in quacunque vellet regni regione sedem suam collocare." (PARKER, Antiqu. Britan. Lond. 1729, p. 18.) "Consecratus erat ab Eucherio, archiepiscopo Arelat. A. 602, et sedit annos 16, ait liber Taxar. Ep. Wint. MS. Wren, et MS. Trin. Ab Ætherio, A. 597. Beda Lib. I. cap. 27. 16 Kal. Dec. 597. Chron. W. Thorn, p. 1760. (GODWIN de Præsul. Cant. 1743, p. 37, note.) Wharton (de Vera Success. Archiep. Cantuar. Angl. Sacr. p. 89) has inferred from two epistles of Pope Gregory, that Augustine was consecrated to the episcopate before he originally passed over into Kent. The first of these epistles acknowledges the kindness shown by Brunichild, queen of the Franks, "erga fratrem

English nation. On his return into Kent, he sent to Rome, Laurence a priest, and Peter a monk, with news of his success. These messengers were, it seems, to give accounts of miracles wrought by him, as Augustine alleged, in confirmation and furtherance of his mission. There are no days, however loudly claiming to illumination, not even when such claims are far from unfounded, incapable of affording multitudes eager to believe anything supernatural. Nor are persons ever wanting equally eager to indulge credulous people with food suitable to their appetite for wonders. At the close of the sixth century, when the leaden age had long pretty thoroughly set-in, even in the chief seats of intellectual cultivation, an ignorant country, more than semi-barbarous, like Jutish Kent, must necessarily have presented a most inviting field to any one possessed of the public eye, and disposed to gratify it by an assumption of miraculous endowments. Augustine appears to have been sufficiently forward in thus amusing his adopted countrymen. He might, indeed, have really suspected some degree of truth in his pretensions. For among parties desirous of his wonder-working intervention, some must have laboured under nervous ailments. In such cases, a strong excitement and firm conviction would naturally render any juggling process productive of temporary benefit. In cases positively hopeless, he lulled his conscience, probably, under a little pious fraud, (as language poisonously runs,) by the false and execrable maxim, that "the end justifies the means." Gregory's disposition for scrutiny was equally dormant. He seems to have heard of Augustine's miracles with all that implicit credulity which then was generally prevalent. His, indeed, apparently was a mind enamoured of the marvellous. At all events, his politic habits readily made him patronise a wonderful tale, whenever it seemed likely to raise the dignity of Rome, or advance a favourite notion. He merely, therefore, contented himself, in noticing the supernatural attestations claimed for Augustine's mission, with gravely admonishing him against the danger of being puffed up under a consciousness of such extraordinary privileges<sup>1</sup>. Gregory provided, besides, the seeds of future debasement to the church so happily founded, by consigning to her new prelate various relics, the false, frivolous, and disgusting incentives to a grovelling superstition. He likewise transmitted vestments proper for celebrating the divine offices; and with still more commendable care for the rising community of Christians, he added several valuable books. Gregory the Great not only, therefore, claims the honour of having embraced a favourable opportunity for delivering England from Paganism, but also of having laid the foundations of her literature, by presenting her with the first contributions towards the formation of a library<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> GREG. PP. 1. Epist. ix. 58. Labb. et Coss. v. 1470.

<sup>2</sup> The following appear to have been the books sent by Gregory. 1 A Bible, in two volumes. 2 A Psalter. 3 A book of the Gospels. 4 Another Psalter. 5 Another book of the Gospels. 6 Apocryphal Lives of the Apostles. 7 Lives of Martyrs. 8 Expositions of certain Epistles and Gospels. The Canterbury Book in the library of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, which supplies this interesting information, closes the brief catalogue with these expressive words:—
HÆ SUNT PRIMITIÆ LIBRORUM TOTIUS ECCLESIE ANGLICANÆ.

Wanley considered the Gregorian Bible to have been extant in the reign of James I.; being led to think so, from an apologetic petition of the Romanists to that prince. He considered neither of the Psalters to be extant, but thought a very ancient Psalter among the Cottonian MSS. to be copied from one of them. Both books of the Gospels, though imperfect, he considered to be extant, one in the Bodleian library, the other in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The other books he considered to be lost. Their substance, however, probably remains in the Saxon

Augustine likewise received answers to certain questions proposed by him to the pontiff. In the first of these, he requested an opinion as to episcopal dealings with inferior clergymen, especially with reference to oblations laid by faithful Christians on the altar. As a general guide, Gregory recommends a habit of consulting Scripture; and, in pecuniary matters, a compliance with Roman usage. This assigned one-fourth of clerical resources to the bishop, for the maintenance of his family and the exercise of hospitality; an equal share to the clergy; a third such to the poor; and the remaining portion to maintain the fabric of the church'. Augushomilies.—See ELSTON'S Homily on the Birth-day of St. Gregory, p. 39.

<sup>1</sup> From this recommendation, given by an Italian prelate at the outset of a mission which had just obtained a favourable reception among the Kentish Jutes, various interested parties are anxious to infer that church-rates and poor-rates legally fall upon tythe property alone. Such reasoners cannot be expected to inquire whether Gregory's recommendation has ever been adopted by any national council or parliament; or even whether the tythe property is equal to the demands which their inference would make it answer.

Upon the usages of Rome, Father Paul supplies the following information. "It was, therefore, ordered in the Western Church, about the year 470, that a division should be made into four parts: the first was to go to the bishop; the second to the rest of the clergy; the third to the fabric of the church, in which, beside that properly so called, was also comprehended the habitation of the bishop, of the other clergy, of the sick, and of the widows; and the fourth part went to the poor."—Treatise of Ecclesiastical Benefices, p. 18.

Now, even supposing Gregory's recommendation to have been subsequently embodied in the canon or statute law of England (which it never was), and that it was originally intended for a body of parochial clergy, scattered on separate benefices all over the country (which it certainly was not), yet English incumbents would have no reason to shrink from it. Assessments for the poor, actually or virtually made upon their tythes, houses, and glebes, together with their own private charities, rarely absorb less than a fourth of their tythes; often more. The repairing and rebuilding of chancels and glebe-houses, dilapidations paid on vacancies, and other like charges, will generally be found, tine, however, was admonished upon the propriety of expending his own fourth as much as possible in common with his clergy, keeping steadily to those monastic obligations which he had contracted whilst at home<sup>1</sup>. But any of the inferior ministers, whom inability for continence had induced to marry, were to be indulged in consuming their portions at residences of their own.

Augustine, secondly, remarking upon varying religious usages prevailing in different churches, demands which of them appeared most eligible for his individual adoption? Gregory leaves these matters to his own discretion, expressing a conviction that he would naturalize in England such usages, whether Roman, Gallic, or any other, as might seem best adapted to the feelings and edification of his converts.

The third question, relating to robberies in churches, is answered by directions for punishing such offences by fines, or by personal chastisement, as the cases should severally require. To the fourth question, whether two brothers might marry two sisters? an affirmative reply is returned. The fifth, relating to marriages between different degrees of kindred, is met by various directions suited to particular cases. The sixth, as to episcopal in the course of an incumbency, to have absorbed little or nothing less than another fourth of the tythes received. As to episcopal claims upon parochial tythes, they were voluntarily relinquished, for the purpose of planting the country with a body of rural clergy.

---

<sup>1</sup> Augustine being restrained by this appeal to his monastic character, from appropriating to himself the episcopal fourth, modern ingenuity has discovered in Gre-

gory's letter an authority for the tripartite division. The total surrender of such an old favourite as this papal epistle is beyond endurance. Its convicted insufficiency, therefore, for purposes which have often brought it forward, is now to shift arguments from what Gregory did say to what he did not say.—See Mr. HALE'S Antiquity of the Church-Rate System Considered. Lond. 1837, p. 16.

consecration by a single prelate, whom distance might prevent from obtaining others of his order to assist him, elicits a sanction for such a consecration, under Augustine's peculiar circumstances. The seventh, as to the nature of his intercourse with the bishops of Gaul and Britain, induces Gregory to say, that, in case of his correspondent's passage over sea, he ought not to take anything upon himself among the native prelacy, but that in Britain all of his order were committed to him: the ignorant for instruction, the weak for persuasive confirmation, the perverse for authority. The remaining questions relate to the baptism of women during pregnancy, their admission into the church after child-birth, and to certain scruples arising from the sexual functions<sup>1</sup>.

Augustine received about the same time, from Gregory, the insidious compliment of a pall<sup>2</sup>. He was charged also to establish twelve suffragan bishops, and to select an archbishop for the see of York. Over this prelate, who was likewise to have under his jurisdiction twelve suffragan sees, he had a personal grant of precedence. After his death, the two archbishops were to rank according to priority of consecration<sup>3</sup>. Augustine's views were now directed to the consolidation and extension of his authority. Hence he repaired to the confines of Wales, and sought an interview with the native prelacy of Britain. The place rendered memorable by this meeting seems to have been under the shade of some noble tree, afterwards known as Augustine's Oak<sup>4</sup>, situated, probably, within the

<sup>1</sup> BED. i. 27, p. 96.

<sup>2</sup> For various particulars respecting the Pall, extracted from a work of high antiquity, and from De Marca, see the Author's Bampton Lectures for 1830, p. 178.

<sup>3</sup> BED. i. 29, p. 99.

<sup>4</sup> "The matter is not so clear but that the place called Augustine's Oak may as well be a town as a tree, so called from some eminent oak in, at, or near it."—FULLER'S Church Hist. 60.

modern county of Worcester. The influence of Ethelbert was used in bringing the parties together, and Augustine declared his principal object to be no other than to secure British co-operation in the great work of converting the Saxons. But then he qualified his application for native aid by insisting upon a complete uniformity in religious usages. The Britons adhered to a very ancient mode in fixing the festival of Easter<sup>1</sup>, and varied in many other particulars from Roman practice. In doctrine, the two churches appear to have been identical. This would not, however, content Augustine. The native Christians were equally intractable; clinging with fond affection to those peculiarities of their national church which bespoke its high antiquity, and which seem, in fact, to connect it immediately with Asia, the cradle of our holy faith. Finding ordinary argument evidently hopeless, Augustine proposed a recourse to miracle. The pretensions, he said, favoured by this attestation, were, undeniably, those that ought to prevail. This was admitted, but with difficulty; suspicion probably arising, that in seeking assent to an abstract proposition, nothing else was intended than to cover some stratagem suited for misleading the multitude. At all events, no time was lost in using the admission. A man was introduced, by birth an Angle, exhibiting marks of blindness. The Britons were invited to pray for his release from that calamity. No considerable assemblage can want the vain and indiscreet. British ecclesiastics, accordingly, accepted the treacherous invitation. Of course, their prayers proved ineffectual. Augustine then stepped forward, bent his knees, and offered an earnest supplication. This ended, the man was found in full possession of his visual faculties. As usual among people uncivilized, or nearly so, the whole arrangements and execution appear to have been admirable. Hence Augustine's principles were approved by acclamation. The leading Britons, however, professing incompetence to receive them without the general consent of their countrymen<sup>1</sup>, requested a second conference, in which they might appear more numerous supported.

---

<sup>1</sup> See the Author's History of the Reformation, i. 437.

To this repaired seven bishops, and various native divines of distinguished learning. In their way, they consulted a hermit, highly esteemed for prudence and holiness. "If Augustine," said the recluse, "be a man of God, take his advice." They then urged the difficulty of ascertaining whether he might be such a man or no. "This is not so difficult," they were told. "Our Lord enjoined, Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart<sup>2</sup>. Now, manage to be at the place of meeting after the foreigner, and if he shall rise at your approach, then you may think him to have learnt of Christ. If he should receive you sitting, and show any haughtiness, then maintain your ancient usages." As the ears of Augustine yet tingled with applause extorted by admiration of a miracle, no test could be more unfortunate. When he saw the Britons, though so numerous and respectable, he did not deign to lift himself from his chair. "I ask only three things of you," he said; "one, that you should keep Easter as we do; another, that you should baptize according to the Roman ritual; a third, that you should join us in preaching to the Angles. With your other peculiarities we shall patiently bear." But the Britons were disgusted alike by his discourtesy and by his pretensions to ecclesiastical jurisdiction over them<sup>1</sup>. They replied, "We shall agree to no one of your propositions. Much less can we admit as our archbishop him who will not even rise to salute us." Augustine now seeing himself completely foiled, became enraged, and hastily said: "If you will not have peace with brethren, you shall have war with enemies. If you will not show your neighbours the way of life, their swords shall avenge the wrong in putting you to death." In these words has been sometimes discerned rather a deliberate threat than a random prophecy. After no long interval<sup>2</sup>, about twelve hundred British monks, from the great monastery of Bangor, in modern Flintshire<sup>3</sup>, were savagely slaughtered on the field of battle, by Ethelfrid, an Anglian chief. "Who are all these unarmed men?" the warrior asked. "Monks," was the reply, "brought hither, after a three days' fast, to pray for success upon their country's arms." Ethelfrid rejoined, "These are active enemies, then, no less than the others; for they come to fight against us with their prayers. Put them to the sword." Of this cruelty, <sup>1</sup> It is not clear from Bede whether Augustine's claims to archiepiscopal jurisdiction were brought forward at the first, or at the second conference, or even whether they were formally brought forward at either. The venerable historian says nothing of them among the conditions proposed, but he mentions the refusal of them in the final answer given after the second conference. At illi nihil horum se facturos, neque illum pro archiepiscopo habituros esse respondebant (ii. 2, p. 112). The British clergy could hardly be ignorant of Augustine's pretensions, must have known, therefore, that if they agreed to his propositions, they would be next required to acquiesce under his superiority.

---

<sup>1</sup> BED. ii. 2, p. 111.

<sup>2</sup> St. Matt. xi. 29.

<sup>2</sup> Probably in 613.—STEVENSON, 102.

<sup>3</sup> "This Banchor was distant but ten or twelve miles from Chester, as Ranulphus Cestrensis, and Bradshaw, in his Life of St. Werburg, say. Leland, in his Itinerary, describes the place as standing in a valley, and having the compass of a walled town, and two gates remaining half a mile distant from each other."—STILLINGFLEET'S Antiquities of the British Churches, 205.

sometimes attributed to his intrigues, Augustine was probably altogether guiltless<sup>1</sup>. But his unbecoming pride, and unwarrantable claims to jurisdiction, naturally engendered a violent antipathy in the British Christians, who refused communion with the Roman party no less than with the Pagan Saxons<sup>2</sup>.

Augustine was called away soon after the failure of his ambitious hopes. Death did not, however, surprise him before he had been duly careful to provide for the continuance of that Church which his useful and honourable labours had founded. Rricula, sister to his friend and patron Ethelbert, was mother to Sebert, king of the East Saxons. This petty prince he found the means of converting, and of persuading to receive a bishop. The prelate consecrated for this mission was Mellitus, one of the company sent by Gregory to his aid, after he had become tolerably established. The see to which Mellitus went was London, then the capital of Sebert. Ethelbert ordered a church to be built there in honour of St. Paul, and thus provided a site for two noble cathedrals; one, spacious above all contemporary fanes, and magnificent above most; the other, second only to St. Peter's as a monument of Grecian architecture, and, besides, the glory of Protestant Christianity. Justus, another of the second missionary band sent over by Gregory, was consecrated by Augustine to a see founded at Rochester<sup>3</sup>, within the territory under Ethelbert's immediate authority. He consecrated also Laurentius as his own successor<sup>1</sup>. But here his arrangements terminated; a plain proof that he was nothing more than the pioneer in evangelizing the Anglo-Saxons. Augustine, however, justly claims the veneration of Englishmen. An opening through which their ancestors received the greatest of imaginable services, was rendered available by his address and self-devotion. A grateful posterity may well excuse in such a man something of human vanity and indiscretion.

<sup>1</sup> Bede appears to have said of him (p. 114), after relating the slaughter of the Bangor monks, quamvis ipso jam multo ante tempore ad caelestia regna sublato. But there is nothing answerable to these words in King Alfred's Anglo-Saxon translation. Hence they have been considered as an interpolation.

<sup>2</sup> HUNTINGDON. Script. post Bedam, 189.

<sup>3</sup> In 604.—WHARTON de Vera Successione Archiep. Cant. Angl. Sacr. i. 90. Wharton thinks Augustine to have died in the same year. His death has, however, been referred to various years down to 616.

After Augustine's death, Laurentius imitated his example in seeking to undermine native partiality for ancient usages. He wrote letters, in conjunction with Mellitus and Justus, to the principal Scottish ecclesiastics, complimenting them at the expense of their brethren in other British regions<sup>2</sup>, and exhorting them to a conformity with Rome. A similar letter was addressed to the inferior clergy of South Britain; their superiors, probably, being considered proof against any such attempt. A complete failure, however, again waited upon Roman ambition; Gregory's mission seemed, indeed, now on the very eve of a final miscarriage. Ethelbert, having lost Bertha, married, in his declining age, a second wife. After his death, his son and successor Eadbald insisted upon espousing this female, aggravating that indecency by an open relapse into Paganism. His kinsmen, also, the sons of Sebert, now deceased, had looked with longing eye upon the whiteness of some bread used in administering the holy communion, and desired a taste of it. "You must first be baptized," was the answer. "The bread of life is reserved for such as have sought the laver of life." This refusal was requited by the expulsion of Mellitus, who retired into Kent. He there found both Justus and Laurentius agreed with him in regarding the Roman cause as hopeless. All three, accordingly, determined upon withdrawing from the isle. This resolve was quickly executed by Justus and Mellitus<sup>1</sup>. Laurentius was to follow them without unnecessary delay. When his preparations for departure were completed, he desired a couch to be spread in the church, as a last farewell to a spot endeared by so many grateful labours. As the sun declined, Eadbald's spirits would naturally rise. Reproof and importunity from Laurentius were likely to trouble him no more. As morning, however, dawned, his eyes were unwelcomely saluted by the archbishop's agitated countenance. "I come," said he, uncovering his shoulders, "to show you what I have undergone during the night. St. Peter stood at my side while I slept, reproached me sharply for presuming to flee from my charge, and scourged me most severely; as these marks will testify<sup>2</sup>!" Eadbald heard the missionary's tale, and gazed upon his livid shoulders with deep uneasiness. He might even dread a renewal of former arguments enforced by some nocturnal flagellation. He consented, accordingly, to dismiss his father's widow, receive baptism, and recall Mellitus and Justus from the Continent<sup>3</sup>. The latter he fixed again at Rochester, but he was unable to re-establish the former in London.

<sup>1</sup> BED. ii. 3, p. 116.

<sup>2</sup> "Sed cognoscentes Britones, Scotos meliores putavimus."—Ib.

ii. 4, p. 118.

A sister of his named Ethelburga, or Tate, was asked

<sup>1</sup> BED. ii. 5, p. 122.

<sup>2</sup> The modern Romish history merely says, "On the morning of his intended departure, he made a last attempt on the mind of Eadbald."—LINGARD. Lond. 1837, i. 81.

<sup>3</sup> BED. ii. 6, p. 124.

in marriage by Edwin, a powerful prince who ruled Northumbria. Eadbald would only hear of the suit under condition that the lady, like her mother, Bertha, should be protected in the free exercise of her religion. Edwin not only stipulated this, but also professed a willingness to embrace Christianity himself, if he should find its pretensions able to stand a sufficient inquiry. Paulinus, one of the second missionary band sent over by Gregory<sup>1</sup>, having been consecrated to the episcopate by Justus, now archbishop of Canterbury<sup>2</sup>, accompanied Ethelburga into the north. His patience was there sorely tried by the strength of Edwin's pagan prejudices. But his Italian address being keenly on the watch for favourable incidents, proved eventually an overmatch for the semi-barbarian's obstinacy. Quichelm, king of the West Saxons, desiring to seize his country, sent a colourable message to Edwin by one provided with a poisoned weapon. The assassin speciously explained his pretended business until every eye around was fixed upon his countenance: then he rushed furiously upon his intended victim. Edwin would, undoubtedly, have perished, had not Lilla, a faithful thane, suddenly sprung forward and received himself the deadly blow. On the same evening, being that of Easter-day, Edwin's queen was delivered of a daughter, afterwards named Eanfleda, and his own acknowledgments were warmly offered to the imaginary gods of Scandinavia, both for the happy termination of Ethelburga's painful anxiety and his own wonderful escape. "I must give hearty thanks to Christ, my Lord," said Paulinus, "for

<sup>1</sup> BED. i. 29, p. 98.

<sup>2</sup> Laurentius appears to have died in 619, and he was succeeded by Mellitus, who never regained his original see of London. On the death of Mellitus in 624, Justus was translated from Rochester to supply his place.—WHARTON de Vera Success. Angl. Sacr. i. 91, 92.

the queen's easy and safe delivery. Nor can I forbear from thinking that this mercy is partly owing to my earnest prayers in her behalf." Edwin then asked, "And will you pray for my success in an expedition that I shall undertake against the cowardly traitor, Quichelm?" The answer was: "Yes: but I fear that Jesus will not hear me unless you resolve upon becoming his disciple." Edwin pledged himself to this qualification at an early opportunity, and as an earnest of that engagement he desired Paulinus to baptize his infant daughter, with twelve of his household. He then marched against Quichelm, and succeeded in killing or capturing all who had been any way concerned in the late attempt upon his life. When returned, however, victorious to his home, the force of early prepossessions rallied, and he declared himself unable to renounce heathenism until his more eminent subjects had approved<sup>1</sup>.

Paulinus was acquainted with a scene that often powerfully struck the mental eye of Edwin. It seems to have been a secret; for Bede supposes the bishop to have learned it by revelation from above. His real informant most likely was the queen. Edwin having succeeded to the Northumbrian throne when hardly out of his cradle, was quickly set aside, and then stealthily conveyed away. Ethelfrid, who had usurped his crown, sent emissaries after him into every corner of the island where he took temporary shelter. At length he found protection at the court of Redwald, king of East Anglia. This prince, being assiduously plied by Ethelfrid with promises and menaces, began to waver. A friend of Edwin was informed of this, and advised instant flight. The royal youth, just retired to rest, hastily left his chamber and withdrew beyond the dwelling, distracted by anxious apprehension. He had already wandered over most of England in quest of safety, and was growing all but absolutely hopeless. As night wore away he probably sank into an agitated slumber. A majestic personage now roused attention, whose countenance and dress were wholly new. Edwin strained his eyes in agony. "Wherefore," said his unknown visitor, "sit you in mourning here while other mortals quietly repose?" He was answered, "It can be no concern of yours whether I spend the night abroad or on my couch." The figure said, "Do not think me unaware of your distress. I know it all. What will you give me, then, to set your heart at ease, and make Redwald spurn every overture of your enemy?" Edwin eagerly promised anything that ever might be in his power. "Again: what would you give," the stranger added, "if I should enable you, not only to trample on your foes, but also to outstrip the power of every neighbouring king?" Edwin pledged himself, if possible, more largely than before. He was then asked, "Should he who cheers you thus with unexpected hopes be found quite equal to crown them with success, would you take hereafter his advice if he should recommend a course of life different from any ever followed in your family, yet far more excellent?" This also met with a hearty affirmative reply. "When this signal shall be repeated, remember, then, your pledge." As these words were spoken the figure pressed his right hand solemnly on Edwin's head, and immediately disappeared. After a short interval, the young Northumbrian saw that kind friend approach whose warning had aroused him from his bed. Now he was, however, told that Redwald, influenced by the queen, had not only given up every thought of betraying him to Ethelfrid, but was even ready to furnish him with troops for driving that usurper from his throne<sup>1</sup>. He did aid him thus, and Edwin regained his patrimonial sovereignty.

---

<sup>1</sup> BED. ii. 9, p. 132.

After his triumphant return from taking vengeance upon Quichelm, Paulinus desired an interview. In this he slowly raised his right hand and pressed it earnestly upon the royal head. Edwin started and trembled violently. "You know this signal?" the Italian said; "you know it to have been originally given by one whose words have most exactly been fulfilled. Remember, then, your pledge." Edwin fell at the missionary's feet, and earnestly inquired his meaning. "By God's mercy," Paulinus added, "when even hope had fled, your life was saved. By the same mercy you have wonderfully prevailed over all your enemies, and regained your paternal throne. A third, and a greater instance of his mercy, yet awaits acceptance. Redeem your pledge: and the God, who has led you through so many dangers to gain and to secure an earthly throne, will remain your friend until you reach the glories of his own eternal kingdom." Before such an appeal Edwin was powerless. He professed himself anxious to redeem the pledge that Paulinus claimed; and only desired baptism to be delayed until he could receive it in company with his leading men<sup>2</sup>.

These duly met, and Paulinus having pleaded in favour of Christianity, Coifi, a Druidic pontiff apparently<sup>3</sup>,

<sup>1</sup> "A. D. 617. This year was Ethelfrith, king of the Northumbrians, slain by Redwald, king of the East Angles; and Edwin, the son of Ella, having succeeded to the kingdom, subdued all Britain, except the men of Kent alone."—Saxon Chronic. DR. INGRAM'S Transl. p. 32.

<sup>2</sup> BED. ii. 12. p. 141.

<sup>3</sup> "Coifi, the pontiff, by whose persuasions Edwin embraced Christianity, is no other than the title of the chief of the Druids."—(PALGRAVE'S Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth. London, 1832, i. 155.) An etymological reason, rendering this opinion

thus addressed the royal president:—"It seems to me, O king, that our paternal gods are worthless, for no man's worship of them has been more devout than mine; yet my lot has been far less prosperous than that of many others not half so pious." A chief then said: "The life of man, O king, reminds me of a winter feast around your blazing fire, while the storm howls or the snow drives abroad. A distressed sparrow darts within the doorway: for a moment is cheered by warmth and shelter from the blast; then, shooting through the other entrance, it is lost again. Such is man. He comes we know not whence, hastily snatches a scanty share of worldly pleasure, then goes we know not whither. If this new doctrine, therefore, will give us any clearer insight into things of so much interest, my feeling is to follow it." Before such arguments, resembling strikingly those of Indian warriors in America, Northumbrian paganism fell. Coifi was foremost in making war upon the superstition which had so severely baulked his hopes. His priestly character obliged him to ride a mare, and forbade him to bear a weapon. The people, therefore, thought him mad when he appeared upon Edwin's charger with lance in hand. He rode, however, to a famous temple at Godmundham, in Yorkshire, pierced the idol through, and ordered the building to be burnt<sup>1</sup>. Soon afterwards, Paulinus kept a most impressive Easter by holding a public baptism at York, in which Edwin, his principal men, and multitudes of inferior people, were solemnly admitted into the Christian church<sup>2</sup>.

---

highly probable, is subjoined in a note; and it is fairly inferred, that the ancient Druidical superstition having escaped extinction while Britain was generally Christian, had found protection, together with, at least, a partial adoption, among the pagan Saxons.

<sup>1</sup> BED. ii. 13. p. 143.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. ii. 14. p. 145.

Paulinus was now established in York as his episcopal see; and this being known at Rome procured for him the customary compliment of a pall<sup>1</sup>. His mission, however, eventually failed. His patron, Edwin, being attacked by Cadwalla, a British prince, and Penda, king of the Mercians, fell in battle<sup>2</sup>. Frightful destruction followed, and Northumbria completely relapsed into paganism. Paulinus, with Queen Ethelburga, sought safety on ship-board, and sailed into Kent<sup>3</sup>. The see of Rochester becoming vacant shortly afterwards, Paulinus was chosen to fill it, and he remained bishop there until his death<sup>4</sup>.

Edwin's faithful friend, Redwald, had made a temporary profession of Christianity, moved by arguments and persuasions which assailed him during a visit into Kent. On returning into East Anglia, his wife, and others whom he valued, easily prevailed upon him to relapse into idolatry; but his brief adherence to the truth was far from fruitless: it naturally undermined the prejudices of others. Carpwald, accordingly, his son and successor, embraced the Gospel on Edwin's recommendation. Shortly afterwards this prince was assassinated, and his brother, Sigebert, was driven an exile into Gaul. There he was baptized; and having regained the East Anglian throne, he received Felix, a Burgundian bishop, for whom he founded an episcopal see at Dunwich, in Suffolk<sup>5</sup>.

Edwin's conversion proved similarly advantageous for his own dominions. It paved the way for a ready and permanent reception of our holy religion, though not by

<sup>1</sup> BED. ii. 17. p. 150. York, it may be remembered, was intended for an archiepiscopal see.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. ii. 20. p. 157.

<sup>3</sup> In 633.—GODWIN de Præsul. 651, note.

<sup>4</sup> BED. ii. 20. p. 159. Paulinus died in 644.—GODWIN de Præsul. 651.

<sup>5</sup> Ib. ii. 15. p. 148. This see of Dunwich was founded in 630.—GODWIN de Præsul. 423.

Roman instrumentality. When Edwin prevailed over his rival Ethelfrid, the sons of that prince took refuge in Scotland, where they became Christians. Oswald, one of them, having established himself in great power on the Northumbrian throne, soon determined upon Christianising his people. Happily his exile had shown him how to accomplish this without Roman intervention; probably odious to him from its connexion with Edwin. He sent accordingly for missionaries to his friends in Scotland; and Aidan, a bishop of uncommon merit, answered the summons. In finding a see for this exemplary prelate, no regard was paid to papal arrangements. Aidan fixed himself at Lindisfarne, or Holy Island<sup>1</sup>, as did also his successors, Finan and Colman, like him, Scots, unconnected with Rome, repudiating her usages and despising her assumptions. It was under these prelates of British origin; under, therefore, a religious system of native growth, that the North of England was evangelised.

More completely still was the whole centre of South Britain indebted for this inestimable benefit to the native clergy. There no Roman preacher first took possession of a field which labourers, more happily circumstanced, afterwards cultivated with lasting success. Peada, king of the Mercians, offering marriage to a Northumbrian princess, was accepted on condition of embracing Christianity. He received, as the bishop of his people, Diuma, a Scot by birth, who was consecrated by Finan, the prelate of Northumbria<sup>2</sup>. Diuma's three immediate suc-

<sup>1</sup> BED. iii. 3. p. 167. Aidan was consecrated to the see of Lindisfarne in 635.—GODWIN de Præsul. 718, note.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. iii. 21. p. 219. Diuma appears to have been consecrated bishop of Mercia in 656. Diuma's three immediate successors were named respectively Cellach, Trumhere, and Jaruman.—WHARTON in Thom. Chesterfield. Angl. Sacr. i. 424.

cessors were also members of the national church; and under these four prelates all our midland counties were converted.

Equal zeal was displayed by the national church, and with equal success, in the kingdom of Essex. That region had been sunk in unheeded heathenism since the failure of Mellitus. One of its princes, however, named Sigebert, had become a frequent guest at the Northumbrian court, and he was there converted. At his desire Chad, a member of the national church, repaired into Essex. He received, eventually, episcopal consecration from Finan, prelate of Northumbria; and it was chiefly by his exertions that the modern diocese of London was reclaimed from Gentile superstition<sup>1</sup>.

Nor was East Anglian Christianity without extensive obligations to the ancient church of Britain. The prelates of East Anglia seem indeed constantly to have been in communion with Rome; but the people's conversion was greatly owing to the labours of Fursey, an Irish monk<sup>2</sup>. Only two counties, therefore, north of the Thames—those of Norfolk and Suffolk—were even under Roman superintendence during their transition from paganism to Christianity, and these two were largely indebted to domestic zeal for their conversion. Every other county, from London to Edinburgh<sup>3</sup>, has the full gratification of pointing to the ancient church of Britain as its nursing mother in Christ's holy faith.

<sup>1</sup> BED. iii. 22. p. 221. Chad appears to have been consecrated by Finan in 654.—GODWIN de Præsul. 172.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. iii. 19. p. 209. This missionary appears to have possessed a dreamy temperament and a poetical imagination. Hence he purchased for himself a memorable name among believers in purgatory.—See the Author's Bampton Lectures, p. 353.

<sup>3</sup> The southern counties of Scotland were included in the ancient kingdom of Northumbria.—INETT. i. 60.

In this patriotic gratification the southern counties cannot so largely share. The West Saxons were chiefly converted by means of Birinus, a Roman monk<sup>1</sup>, whom Pope Honorius sent over into England<sup>2</sup>. His labours, however, owed probably a large portion of their success to Oswald, king of Northumbria, who had arrived at the West Saxon court as suitor to the king's daughter. At such a time it was found an easy matter to convert both the young princess and her father, Kynegils. To the latter Oswald stood sponsor; nor did he leave the south until he had accomplished arrangements for providing Birinus with an episcopal see at Dorchester, in Oxfordshire<sup>3</sup>. Thus the West Saxon church was importantly indebted for its establishment to a powerful professor of the ancient national religion. Its second bishop also was Agilbert, a Frenchman, who had long studied in Ireland<sup>4</sup>, and who undertook the duties of a missionary among the West Saxons by desire of Oswy, king of Northumberland<sup>5</sup>. The principles and habits of this prelate must have been, therefore, sufficiently conformable to those of the ancient national church. His successor was Wine, an Anglo-Saxon by birth, and a monk of Winchester. In usages this prelate probably followed Rome; but he does not appear to have conceded her any jurisdiction, for he sought consecration in Gaul, not from the archbishop of Canterbury<sup>6</sup>.

The Gospel, having thus won its way over other parts of England, at length obtained an establishment in Sussex.

<sup>1</sup> RUDBORNE. Hist. Maj. Winton. Angl. Sacr. i. 190.

<sup>2</sup> The arrival of Birinus is referred to 634; the baptism of Kynegils, to the following year.—Ib. note.

<sup>3</sup> BED. iii. 7. p. 176.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. 177.

<sup>5</sup> RUDBORNE. Angl. Sacr. i. 192.

<sup>6</sup> BED. iii. 7. p. 177.

The people were prepared for its admission by a small community of native monks settled within their territory. These recluses, however, made no great impression upon the surrounding country; but Ædilwalch, king of Sussex, returned from the Mercian court a Christian. He had been baptized there at the recommendation of Wulfhere, king of Mercia, who stood sponsor to him<sup>1</sup>, and who was a member of Britain's national church. Ædilwalch's people were indeed chiefly converted by means of the famous Wilfrid, then a wanderer, and always a zealous partisan of Rome<sup>2</sup>. In Sussex, therefore, the cases of Essex and Northumbria were reversed. In these latter countries a Roman introduction prepared the way for British success: among the South Saxons, Britain made an opening through which Rome prevailed.

Her complete and final prevalence over the national church flowed from female influence and the dexterity of her agents. Eanfleda, who had been driven from her native Northumbria in infancy with Paulinus, returned thither, after an education among her maternal relatives in Kent, as the wife of Oswy, then king of the country, and Bretwalda<sup>3</sup>. Inheriting all the religious constancy of her mother, Ethelburga, and of her grandmother, Bertha, she would not abandon Kentish usages for those of Northumbria. Her son also was intrusted to the tuition of Wilfrid, an able Englishman of the Roman party, whose attainments had been matured in southern

---

<sup>1</sup> Wulfhere gave to Ædilwalch a substantial proof of his sponsorship in the Isle of Wight, which he conquered, and made over to him.—Sax. Chr. 47.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. iv. 13. p. 293. Wilfrid obtained from Ædilwalch the peninsula of Selsey, where he fixed an episcopal see about the year 680 (LE NEVE, 55). After his return to the north, the South Saxon diocese was governed for a time by the neighbouring bishops of Winchester.

<sup>3</sup> Sax. Chr. 88.

Europe. Oswy, however, continued firm to the religious profession of his youth. Easter was accordingly celebrated at his court on different days; one party enjoying its festivities, while another placed in strong contrast with them the austerities of Lent. At length Oswy consented to purchase domestic peace by hearing a solemn argument in the monastery which he had recently founded at Whitby<sup>1</sup>; Colman, then bishop of Northumbria, assisted by Chad, bishop of Essex, conducted the British cause<sup>2</sup>. Wilfrid pleaded for that of Rome. The national divines insisted chiefly upon a tradition originating, as alleged, in St. John, our Lord's beloved disciple. The foreign party traced Roman tradition to St. Peter, who was intrusted by Christ with the keys of heaven. "Were they really intrusted to him?" asked Oswy. "Undoubtedly so," he was answered. "And can you allege the grant of any such privilege to an authority of yours?" Oswy then demanded. "We cannot," Colman replied. "I must leave your party, then," said Oswy; "for I should not choose to disoblige him who keeps the key of heaven. It might be found impossible to get the door open when I seek admittance<sup>3</sup>." Unless one

<sup>1</sup> BROMTON. X. Scriptores. Lond. 1652, col. 788. Whitby was then called Streatneshalch. This famous conference was holden there in 664. — WHARTON de Episc. Dunelm. Angl. Sacr. i. 692. Inett (Hist. of the Eng. Ch. i. 62,) seems to think that the Roman party might have prevailed before, had it not been for the uncommon merit of Aidan and Finan; and that its eventual prevalence arose from some inequality to his predecessors on the part of Colman. The principal reason, however, there can be no doubt, was the influence of Eanfleda.

<sup>2</sup> Agilbert, bishop of the West Saxons, was the real representative of the Roman party, but he devolved the advocacy of his case upon Wilfrid, on account of his own imperfect acquaintance with the Saxon language.

<sup>3</sup> BED. iii. 25. p. 236. It is curious to observe how Romish partisans, eventually, expanded favourable hints into broad admissions. Oswy's concluding speech again remembered the chieftains of America, this language would seem like jest rather than earnest<sup>1</sup>. But it was generally applauded, and the ancient usages of Britain were formally renounced. Colman, however, with many of his adherents, were disgusted, and retired to their brethren in Scotland<sup>2</sup>.

Probably this triumph of the Roman party involved little or no change in articles of belief. If we except prayers and offerings for the dead, we have indeed no sufficient evidence that papal peculiarities of doctrine were then established. Gregory the Great is known, from his epistles, to have repudiated the authority since claimed for his see<sup>3</sup>, and to have disapproved the adoration of images<sup>4</sup>. His Sacramentary shows him to have stands thus in Bede:—"Ego vobis dico, quia hic est ostiarius ille cui ego contradicere nolo, sed in quantum novi, vel valeo, hujus cupio in omnibus obedire statutis, ne forte, me adveniente ad fores regni cœlorum, non sit qui reseret, adverso illo qui claves tenere probatur." John of Tinmouth, an unpublished chronicler of the 14th century, gives the following version of these words:—"Ex quo, quod vos omnes in hoc consentitis, quod Christus tradidit Petro claves regni cœlestis, una cum ecclesie principatu, nec alteri alicui tale quid commisit, dico vobis quod tali ostiario contradicere non audeo, ne forsitan, cum venero, claudat mihi fores." (Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 12. f. 26.) It should be observed, that although Wilfrid appealed to the authority of the Roman see as deserving respectful attention, he did not claim for it any right of deciding the controversy.—See the Author's Bampton Lectures, p. 163.

<sup>1</sup> "The absurd termination of this synod appears to have moved the indignation of King Alfred, who omits the chapter in his Anglo-Saxon version of the Eccelesiastical History."—(Brit. Mag. Ap. 1837, p. 370, note.) Was Dr. Lingard similarly "moved"? He contents himself with telling his readers,—“Oswio terminated the debate by declaring that he should prefer the institutions of St. Peter to those of St. Columba.” (Hist. Engl. Lond. 1837, i. 101. Eglise Anglo-Saxonne, 55.) Thus the joke is lost, but so is likewise the gross absurdity to which Rome ostensibly owed one of her most important English triumphs.

Columba was the channel of transmission for the alleged tradition from St. John.

<sup>2</sup> BED. iii. 26. p. 239.

<sup>3</sup> GREG. PP. Epist. lib. iv. 32, 34, 38, 39. Lab. et Coss. v. 1182, 1189, 1192, 1195.

<sup>4</sup> Ejusd. Epist. 9, lib. ix.

earnestly desired of God that departed saints should pray for the faithful, but to have lived before Christians had fallen into a habit of invoking them<sup>1</sup>. Of ceremonies he was a zealous patron; and upon the whole, undoubtedly, he bore no unimportant part in laying the foundations of Romanism both in England and elsewhere. Still the system established under his auspices was widely different from that eventually sanctioned at Trent. Ritually the two were very much alike; doctrinally very far apart. The earliest Anglo-Saxon Christians, therefore, agreed essentially with their descendants since the Reformation in all but services for the dead. Reasons assigned for these are, however, so very far from satisfactory, that their discontinuance in the sixteenth century may fairly be considered, not only as allowable, but even as an exercise of sound discretion<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> See a prayer from his MS. Sacramentary, formerly belonging to the church of Exeter, now in the Bodleian library.—Bampt. Lect. 218.

<sup>2</sup> A priest, Gregory says, had received many attentions from an unknown person at a warm bath. By way of recompense he brought him one day some bread, which had been among the eucharistic oblations. "Why do you give me this, Father?" his attendant said. "This is holy bread: I cannot eat it. I was once master here, and am still bound to the place for my sins. If you wish to serve me, offer this bread in my behalf; and know that your prayers are heard, when you find me here no longer." The speaker then vanished. A week was now spent by the priest in fasting, prayers, and daily offerings of the Eucharist. When it was expired he went to the bath again, but he saw nothing of his former attendant.—GREG. Mag. P. Opp. tom. iii. p. 304.

This idle tale is an instructive commentary upon prevailing notions as to the soul's posthumous condition. As it is only one among many such stories, long circulated in proof of purgatory and in support of services for the dead, our Reformers, having no scriptural warrant for such services, were fully justified in discontinuing them. Though of high antiquity they had been largely indebted for popularity to such contemptible inventions, and they had been latterly urged as undeniable evidences that primitive times held the Platonic doctrine of purgatory.

CHAPTER II.

FROM THEODORE TO ALCUIN.

669—804.

WILFRID'S APPOINTMENT TO THE PRELACY—THEODORE—COUNCIL OF HERTFORD—WILFRID'S DISGRACE—COUNCIL OF HATFIELD—BENEDICT BISCOP—ORIGIN OF A PAROCHIAL CLERGY—DEATH OF THEODORE—FINAL TROUBLES, AND DEATH OF WILFRID—LAWS OF INACOUNCILS OF BAPCHILD, AND BERGHAMPSTEAD—CHURCH-SHOT—TYTHES—MONASTERIES—PILGRIMAGES TO ROME—ALDHELM—BEDE—EGBERT—TRIPARTITE DIVISION OF TYTHES—ALCUIN—BONIFACE—COUNCIL OF CLOVESHOO—OFFA, AND THE ARCHBISHOPRIC OF LICHFIELD—COUNCIL OF CALCUTH—PETER-PENCE—IMAGE WORSHIP—RECEIVED WITH EXECRATION IN ENGLAND—THE CAROLINE BOOKS—EGBERT'S PENITENTIAL.

AT Whitby, Augustine's ambitious designs were only realised in part. All England now, indeed, received religious usages from Italy; but no farther concession seems to have been intended. When, accordingly, Tuda, another of the revered Scottish divines<sup>1</sup>, was chosen to succeed Colman, he did not seek consecration at Canterbury, but among the Picts, or southern Scots, a Christian body ever in communion with Rome<sup>2</sup>. His possession of the Northumbrian see lasting only a few months, Wilfrid, then about thirty<sup>1</sup>, was appointed bishop.

<sup>1</sup> It was, probably, Tuda's connexion with former bishops of Northumbria, joined to his early partiality for usages different from theirs, that procured his election to the episcopate. Something of a compromise might seem to have been intended in this appointment. Bromton bears the following testimony to the excellence of the three preceding bishops. "Hi autem tres episcopi Scotorum prædicti; scilicet, Aidanus, Finanus, et Colmannus, miræ sanctitatis et parcimoniæ extite-

runt, nec enim potentes seculi suscipiebant, nisi qui ad eos causa orandi solummodo veniebant."—X. Scriptores, 789.

<sup>2</sup> BED. iii. 26. p. 239. "Ipsi australes Picti, qui intra eosdem montes habent sedes, multo ante tempore, ut perhibent relicto errore idololatriæ, fidem veritatis acceperant, prædicante eis verbum Nynia episcopo reverendissimo et sanctissimo viro de natione Britonum, qui erat Romæ regulariter fidem et mysteria veritatis edocuit."—Ib. iii. 4. p. 169.

This remarkable man, born of wealthy parentage, early lost his mother. His father married again, and young Wilfrid quarrelled with the lady. Being thus uncomfortable at home, he desired permission to seek his fortune in the world. His father gave it, with his blessing, and a very handsome outfit. He was then in his fourteenth year, and he went well armed, horsed, clad, and attended, to the court of his native Northumbria. His family connexions procured him an immediate introduction to Eanfleda, the queen; who was delighted with his youthful beauty and intelligence. Wilfrid's mind being cast in a religious mould, he gladly retired from court with a paralytic nobleman, bent upon consecrating the remainder of life to piety, in the monastery of Lindisfarne<sup>2</sup>. His young attendant's active spirit soon began to ferment in that cloistered solitude. He brooded over the Roman prepossessions of his royal patroness, Eanfleda, and became sure that Scottish notions of theology must be erroneous<sup>3</sup>. He was now grown a young man, and very naturally thought nothing more desirable than a journey into Italy for better instruction. The indulgent queen approved, gave him a passport to the hospitality of her cousin, the king of Kent, on his way, and Wilfrid's tour was joyfully begun. At the Kentish court, he met another youth of kindred enthusiasm and intelligence; like himself, too, impatiently bound for Italy. The two continued fellow-travellers to Lyons, where Wilfrid halted, by persuasion of Dalfinus, bishop there, who became highly partial to him. He would have adopted him, married him to his niece, and given him a very liberal settlement. Wilfrid was proof against such temptations. He went to Rome, stayed there several months, learnt the four Gospels perfectly, as also the Easter calculation, unknown to the schismatics of Britain and Ireland, with many other points of ecclesiastical regulation. Thus accomplished, he returned, receiving on his way from his friend, Dalfinus, the tonsure of St. Peter, a representation of our Lord's thorny crown. Being arrived in Northumberland, he was provided with a monastery at Ripon<sup>1</sup>. When Tuda's death gave him promotion to the episcopate, he disregarded Canterbury<sup>2</sup>; and crossing over into Gaul, obtained consecration at Compeigne from his friend, Agilbert, now removed from the West Saxon bishopric to that of Paris<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> SIM. DUNELM. X. Script. 78.

<sup>2</sup> EDDII STEPHANI Vita S. Wilfridi. XV. Scriptores. Oxon. 1691, p. 52.

<sup>3</sup> "Animadvertens paulatim adolescens animi sagacis minime perfectam esse virtutis viam quæ tradebatur a Scotis."—BED. 439.

In Wilfrid, real excellences were alloyed by levity and ostentation. He did not, accordingly, hasten to return after consecration, but thoughtlessly displayed his new dignity amidst the tempting hospitalities of Gaul. His royal patron, disgusted by this delay, conferred the Northumbrian see upon Chad, abbot of Lastingham, near Whitby, and brother to the East Saxon bishop<sup>4</sup>. The prelate-elect would have been consecrated at Canterbury, had not Deusdedit, the archbishop, inopportunely died. He repaired, accordingly, to Win-

<sup>1</sup> EDDIUS. XV. Script. 53, 54, 55.

<sup>2</sup> "Rex Alchfrid misit Wilfridum presbyterum ad regem Galliarum, qui eum sibi suisque consecrari faceret episcopum." (BED. iii. 28, p. 246.) Wilfrid desired this, being unwilling to receive consecration "either from prelates not in communion with Rome, as the Britons and Scots, or from those who agree with schismatics: qui schismaticis consentiunt." (EDDIUS. XV. Script. 57.) This last clause is the key to his disregard of Canterbury.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. 247. BROMTON, 789.

<sup>4</sup> STUBBS. Act. PP. Ebor. X. Script. 1689.

chester, and received consecration from Wine, the bishop there, assisted by two British prelates<sup>1</sup>. The two kings of Kent and Northumbria now thought of staying the progress of religious dissension, by sending a new primate to Rome for consecration, Their choice fell upon Wighard, a native priest, who was very kindly entertained at the papal court, but who died there before consecration<sup>2</sup>. This opportunity was not lost upon Italian subtlety. Vitalian, then pope, determined upon trying whether the Anglo-Saxons would receive an archbishop nominated by himself. He chose eventually Theodore, an able and learned monk of sixty-six, born at Tarsus, in Cilicia<sup>3</sup>. Former nominations to Anglo-Saxon sees having been domestic, some doubt would naturally arise as to Theodore's reception; and after consecration, he spent several months in Gaul. The insular princes, however, wearied by the animosities of contending parties, only sought an umpire likely to command respect; hence they did not merely receive Theodore, but conceded also to him that primacy over the whole Anglo-Saxon church, vainly coveted by Augustine, and after his death apparently regarded as unattainable<sup>4</sup>.

Theodore may be regarded as the parent of Anglo-Saxon literature. His exertions to illumine his adopted country were unwearied, and were crowned by the happiest success. They were aided by a scholarly and indefatigable coadjutor, named Adrian, born in Africa. Being

<sup>1</sup> BED. iii. 28. p. 247. Wine was then the only prelate in the island, whose conformity to Roman usages made him considered by that party as canonically consecrated.—Ib.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. iii. 29. p. 249.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. iv. 1. p. 254. Theodore was consecrated, at Rome, by Pope Vitalian, in March, 668, and he came to Canterbury in May, 669.—WHARTON de Vera Success. Archiep. Cant. Angl. Sacr. i. 93.

<sup>4</sup> BED. iv. 2. p. 258.

advantageously known as member of a Campanian monastic fraternity, the pope wished him to accept Canterbury. Adrian refused, but recommended Theodore. He would have refused also, unless his African friend had promised to accompany him<sup>1</sup>. These two admirable foreigners brought some valuable books into England, instituted schools, and spread sound information on every side<sup>2</sup>. To them the Anglo-Saxons owed that intellectual eminence which soon eclipsed the neighbouring nations. Theirs is the school that, under Alcuin, was eventually transplanted into Gaul: where it gave a new and lasting impulse to European civilization. Learned labours were not allowed, however, to trench unduly on the time of Theodore. He made efficient use of his authority, by taking extensive journeys, and urging everywhere an uniformity with Rome. One of the earliest cases referred to him was that of Wilfrid. The superseded bishop represented Chad as an intruder, and begged for his own restitution to a see of which he had been so unexpectedly deprived. At all events, Theodore decided, Chad had been uncanonically consecrated. Upon this, however, that humble Christian felt no disposition to dispute: "He had been unwillingly drawn," he said, "from his beloved abbey at Lastingham,

<sup>1</sup> BED. iv. l. p. 254.

<sup>2</sup> "Their pupils diffused the knowledge they had acquired throughout England, and established schools in every monastery, for the education, not only of the clergy, but also for such of the laity as evinced any inclination for literature. The only deficiency was a competent supply of books. Theodore had brought with him Josephus, the poems of Homer, and, probably, several other works of inferior note: still they were inadequate to assuage the thirst for knowledge which had been excited. Many journeys to Rome were, therefore, undertaken, in order to augment the number of books from the collections of that city; and a library began to be the pride and ornament of monasteries."—The Life of Alcuin, by F. LORENZ. Engl. Transl. Lond. 1837, p. 7.

and thither he should again gladly retire<sup>1</sup>." He did not long enjoy there that religious obscurity which his mind so fondly coveted. Jaruman, the Mercian bishop, died soon after; and Chad, having consented to the imposition of Theodore's hands<sup>2</sup>, was placed in the deceased prelate's room at the Mercian king's desire. Wilfrid regained possession of the Northumbrian diocese, then extending beyond the confines of modern England into the country of Oswy's Pictish subjects<sup>3</sup>.

A national synod was now convened<sup>4</sup> by Theodore<sup>5</sup>, at Hertford, a frequent residence of the East Saxon kings<sup>6</sup>. The bishops of East Anglia, Rochester, Wessex, and Mercia, were personally present, together with many well known canonists. Wilfrid, the Northumbrian prelate, sent two representatives. "My object," said Theodore, "is a solemn engagement by us all, to observe uniformly whatever the holy fathers have decreed and defined." He then asked his hearers individually, whether they were willing; being answered affirmatively, he produced a body of canon-law<sup>7</sup>, and from it selected ten

<sup>1</sup> BED. 259.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. 260.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. iv. 3. p. 261. <sup>4</sup> A.D. 673.

<sup>5</sup> Baronius would have it believed that this council met under authority of the Roman see. English Protestants have understood it to have met under authority of the Saxon princes. The latter is a more probable supposition than the former. But Bede, who is the only source of information, says merely Theodorus cogit concilium.

<sup>6</sup> CHAUNCY'S Hertfordshire. 1826, p. 453. Bede's spelling is Heortford, which has occasioned some speculation. Cambden, and after him, Chauncy, say that this means The Red Ford, and is a translation of Durocbriva, the ancient British name of Hertford. They proceed, however, upon the principle of taking he as identical in Saxon with the, which Spelman reasonably says ego non reperio. King Alfred's translation of Bede has Heortford, and so has the Saxon Chronicle. There can, in fact, be little or no doubt that Hertford is the place.

<sup>7</sup> Probably "the collection, or book of canons, which is mentioned in the thirteenth session of the Council of Chalcedon, and was afterwards confirmed in a novel of the Emperor Justinian."—INETT. i. 77.

provisions, as especially demanding approbation. These prescribe the Roman Easter, some regulations for bishops, clergymen, and monks; the holding of synods twice in every year, and the due maintenance of matrimonial ties. The approval sought followed a sufficient examination, and was regularly signed. Refractory clergymen were to be disqualified from officiating, and utterly disowned<sup>1</sup>.

Theodore, after thus providing a national code of ecclesiastical jurisprudence, authorized two episcopal depositions. Winfrid, bishop of Mercia, having given some offence<sup>2</sup>, was driven from his bishopric, and the metropolitan approved<sup>3</sup>. He did the same in Wilfrid's case. Egfrid, the Northumbrian king, had married Etheldred, an East Anglian princess, bred a zealous Christian, and smitten with a superstitious trust in monastic austerities. A subject of high distinction had been her husband in early youth, but she repelled his embraces. As a queen, this pertinacity continued: vain were Egfrid's importunities, vain his promises and persuasions to her spiritual adviser, Wilfrid. At length her numero fidelium auferentur; sed de hac re ad præsens silemus." (SPELMAN. i. 153.) "That as the number of the faithful increased, bishops should be multiplied, a point (adds the council, as if to express the anxiety of the fathers upon the subject) that we have, up to the present time, not sufficiently attended to. Lingard would have us believe, on the authority of Bede, that this canon was not ratified; but he cites no passage to this effect, nor do I believe there is one." (Brit. Mag. Ap. 1837, p. 371.) Bede concludes the canon with silimus, not silemus. 274.

<sup>1</sup> BED. iv. 5. p. 271. The ten especial canons may be there seen at length, and also in Spelman (i. p. 153), Wilkins (i. 41), and as translated in Johnson's Collection, and in Chauncy, i. 254.

<sup>2</sup> "Per meritum cujusdam inobedientiæ."—BED. iv. 6. p. 275.

<sup>3</sup> Wharton considers the Council of Hertford to have determined upon dividing the immense diocese of Mercia, and that Winfrid's consent was found unattainable. (Angl. Sacr. i. 424.) This is, probably, the fact. The Hertford canon bearing upon this case is, "Nonum capitulum in commune tractatum est, ut plures episcopi, crescente

humour was indulged, and she gladly left courtly profusion for the privations of a cloister<sup>1</sup>. The new queen, probably, found Egfrid prejudiced against Wilfrid, as an abettor of his late wife's mortifying repugnance. The Northumbrian prince, accordingly, became an attentive hearer, when she painted invidiously his extensive acquisitions and ostentatious habits<sup>2</sup>. Two prelacies, it was urged<sup>3</sup>, might be maintained upon his endowments, and the charge was too great for one. His own consent, however, for any division, appears to have been hopeless: hence the case was laid before Theodore, under whose deliberate sanction he was deprived of his bishopric. National authorities being all against him, he determined, under advice of some brother prelates, upon trying the effect of papal interposition. At Rome, he found some sort of council sitting, and before it he laid his case. The body pronounced his treatment uncanonical, and Pope Agatho furnished him with a letter, announcing this decision. Papal jurisdiction, however, being unknown to Wilfrid's countrymen, they spurned Agatho's interference,

<sup>1</sup> BED. iv. 19. p. 304

<sup>2</sup> MALMESBURY. Script. post Bedam, 149. Enumerating eloquently, we are told by Eddius, Wilfrid's friend and chaplain, like a most impious Jezebel, slaying God's prophets, "omnem gloriam ejus secularum et divitias, nec non cœnobiorum multitudinem, et ædificiorum magnitudinem, innumerumque sodalium exercitum, regalibus vestimentis et armis ornatum."—XV. Script. 63.

<sup>3</sup> Two prelacies were actually founded, on his disgrace; those of York, and Hagulstad, the modern Hexham. Johnson says, (Collection. Pref. to the Rom. Counc. 679)

"Wilfrid, for opposing this partition, was deposed, if not degraded." From the following words of Stubbs, it is plain that Wilfrid's disgrace was not a hasty measure, nor, probably, uncanonical. "Quia rex pontificem de sede sua præter consensum Theodori archiepiscopi Cantuar. pellere nequibat, mandavit archiepiscopo ut adesset, auditisque quas accusatores ejus finxerant causis, pulsus est ab episcopatu sanctus Wilfridus, anno ab incarnatione Domini DC. lxxviii. qui est annus episcopatus sui xiiij. et per decennium exulavit."—Act. PP. Ebor. X. Script. 1691.

and angrily thrust the disgraced prelate into prison<sup>1</sup>; nor, when liberated, could he regain his bishopric. Driven, under this disappointment, to display the best parts of his character, he passed into Sussex, yet a neglected, heathen district; and his active, able mind, there found honourable employment in evangelizing the country<sup>2</sup>.

That interminable folly of rash and conceited spirits, which broaches a succession of subtle speculations on the Deity, had lately agitated Christendom by broaching Monothelite opinions. These had been approved, amidst the din of a bewildering controversy, by Honorius, then Roman pontiff,—an indiscretion sorely embarrassing to advocates of papal infallibility<sup>3</sup>. Agatho, a successor of his, advised Constantine Pogonatus to enforce religious peace, in a general council. This, known as the sixth, met at Constantinople, in 680, and condemned the Monothelites. For the same purpose, Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury, procured a meeting of the Anglo-Saxon church at Hatfield, in Hertfordshire<sup>4</sup>, then a portion of the royal patrimony<sup>5</sup>. This assembly solemnly received the first five general councils<sup>6</sup>, and a synod lately holden at Rome<sup>7</sup>. Thus was the foundation laid of that sound

<sup>1</sup> Bamp. Lect. 168. MALMESBURY de Gest. PP. Angl. Script. post Bedam, 150.

<sup>2</sup> BED. iv. 13. p. 292.

<sup>3</sup> MOSHEIM, Cent. VII. pt. 2. ch. v. Lond. 1841, vol. ii. pp. 104, 107.

<sup>4</sup> BED. iv. 17. p. 300. The Council of Hatfield met in Sept. 680.

<sup>5</sup> CHAUNCY, ii. 4. The Saxon kings continued in possession of this estate until King Edgar bestowed it upon the monastery of Ely.—Ib.

<sup>6</sup> That of Nice, against the Arians; that of Constantinople, against Macedonius and Eudoxius; that of Ephesus, against Nestorius; that of Chalcedon, against Eutyches and Nestorius; and that of Constantinople, against Theodore, Theodoret, and the Epistles of Ibas.—BED. ut supra. SPELM. i. 168. WILK. i. 51.

<sup>7</sup> In 649, under Martin I. The particular object of this was to condemn the Monothelites.—See LABB. et Coss. vi. 354.

discretion in treating questions above human comprehension, from which the Church of England never has departed. Crude novelties respecting "the deep things of God" have invariably been discountenanced within her communion.

Among the divines at Hatfield was John the Precentor, an illustrious foreigner, brought over by Benedict Biscop<sup>2</sup>. The latter, a noble Northumbrian, had been designed for a military life, but literature and religion made him their own. He travelled to Rome with Wilfrid, in 654, and brought home a considerable collection of books<sup>3</sup>. A modern collector would also have imported antiquities and works of art. Benedict, as might be expected, imported relics<sup>4</sup>, and valued them probably, intellectual as he was, even more highly than his volumes. For the whole collection a resting place was provided in a monastery, founded by Benedict's means, at the mouth of the Wear. To this retreat he also conducted the Precentor, whom he drew from Roman society, as a master for his rising community of monks, in chanting the service and in reading Latin<sup>5</sup>. Before John's departure, he was furnished by the pope with a copy of the decrees lately passed synodically at Rome against the Monothelites. It was also his charge to make particular observations upon the faith of England<sup>6</sup>. Although Theodore, by uncommon ability, zeal, and firmness, had brought the whole Anglo-Saxon people to a

<sup>1</sup> 1 Cor. ii. 10.

<sup>2</sup> BED. iv. 18. p. 302.

<sup>3</sup> "Librorum innumerabilem, ut legitur, omnis generis copiam, domum comportavit."—Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Nero. E. 1. Vita Venerabilis Bedæ, f. 394.

<sup>4</sup> DUGDALE, Monasticon, i. 96.

"Quot vero Benedictus divina volumina, quantas beatorum apostolorum sive martyrum Christi reliquias attulit, quis annunciet?"—SIM. DUNELM. X. Script. 92.

<sup>5</sup> BED. iv. 18. p. 303. <sup>6</sup> Ib.

conformity with papal usages, yet leading Roman ecclesiastics were jealous and suspicious. He was a Greek, and remarkable for independence of mind. Hence Pope Vitalian was careful to secure for him his friend Adrian, as a companion. That learned African, to whose instructions ancient England owed so much, came over partly as a spy upon his actions<sup>1</sup>. This espionage, the successor of Vitalian gladly renewed by means of the Precentor.

Besides providing for his adopted country an outline of ecclesiastical jurisprudence and terms of religious conformity, Theodore appears to have been guided by an usage of his native Asia in planning the establishment of a parochial clergy. Under royal sanction, he followed Justinian in offering the perpetual patronage of churches as an encouragement for their erection<sup>2</sup>. Opulent proprietors were thus tempted to supply the spiritual wants of their tenantry; and Bede records two instances in which this judicious policy proved effective<sup>3</sup>. Theodore's oriental system had been, however, in operation for ages before every English estate of any magnitude had secured the benefit of a church within its boundary. This very lingering progress has thrown much obscurity

<sup>1</sup> "Ne quid ille contrarium veritati fidei, Græcorum more, in Ecclesiam cui præset, introduceret."—BED. iii. l. p. 255.

<sup>2</sup> WHELOC. in Bed. p. 399. The authority is an extract from the Codex Cantuariensis, a MS. in the library of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. "There are some things also to be found in those laws (of Justinian), which show that country churches had anciently been built and endowed in the East; since Justinian there begins about this time to settle the rights of patronage, giving to him who had built the church, the power to nominate a priest to officiate in it, but leaving the bishop authority to approve or reject the person so nominated."—COMBER'S Divine Right of Tythes. Part 2. p. 79.

<sup>3</sup> The cases of Puch and Addi, both counts, in the north of England. (Bed. v. 4, 5. pp. 375, 388.) There can be no doubt that many other such cases of pious munificence had occurred when Bede wrote, for he does not mention these as extraordinary acts.

around the origin of parishes. The principle of their formation will, however, account sufficiently for their unequal sizes, and for existing rights of patronage.

At the great age of eighty-eight, Theodore was released from earthly labours<sup>1</sup>. His life had been no less honourable than long; and he must, undoubtedly, be ranked among the ablest of English primates. A Protestant may possibly regret that such eminent qualities laid the foundation of an insidious influence, which eventually adulterated sound religion, and insulted the national independence. The days of Theodore, however, were anterior to most Roman innovations, and he seems always to have looked upon the papal see under an Oriental feeling of independence. Far inferior persons in the religious history of ancient England have, accordingly, been canonised. The name of Theodore, though he was the corner-stone of pontifical authority through all the British isles, will be vainly sought among the saintly rubrics in a Romish calendar: but his reputation stands on higher grounds. By defining principles of doctrine and discipline, he first gave stability to the religious establishment of England. Her mental growth was effectually secured by his active and zealous patronage of learning. During the earlier years of his English residence, instruction was given personally, both by himself and his friend, Adrian, in every branch of scholarship then known to students<sup>2</sup>. As a theologian, Theodore long maintained a high degree of importance. He had adopted a prevailing opinion, that every sin must be visited by some corresponding penalty<sup>3</sup>. For the just apportionment of this, he compiled his famous Penitential, an assumed authority for the modern Romish confessional, of extraordinary value from its antiquity and bulk. Theodore, however, has afforded Romanism considerable embarrassment, by pronouncing confession to God alone sufficient for spiritual safety<sup>1</sup>. His authority, therefore, is unfavourable to sacramental absolution, that scholastic lure, so ominous to attrite<sup>2</sup> souls, but admirably fitted for a ready and powerful hold upon mankind.

<sup>1</sup> BED. v. 8. p. 398. Theodore died in 690.—INETT. i. 117. Sax. Chr. 67.

<sup>2</sup> BED. iv. 2. p. 259.

<sup>3</sup> See Bampton Lectures. Sermon V.

When Theodore felt his end approaching, he thought of Wilfrid<sup>3</sup>, conscious, perhaps, of some harshness towards him, or merely anxious to render him a parting service. Though vain and restless, that prelate ever shone under adversity. On his first journey for papal interference, stress of weather drove him into Friesland, where he nobly spent a winter in evangelizing the heathen population<sup>4</sup>. His subsequent exile had rendered a like invaluable service to pagan Sussex<sup>5</sup>. Theodore could no longer disapprove. In the expatriated prelate, he only clergymen, that this feeling is rendered, by means of sacerdotal absolution, effectual for saving souls; an easier way than genuine contrition, being thus mercifully provided by God. This bold, but popular assumption, is artfully evaded by the Council itself; so that an acute Romanist, pressed in argument, has a loophole for escaping from it.

<sup>1</sup> See the canon, as given in the published Penitential, Bampton Lectures, 289. It stands thus in an ancient copy, or fragment of Theodore's Penitential, in the British Museum (MSS. Cotton. Vespasian. D. 15, f. 100). "Confessionem suam dō soli, si necesse est, licebit agere."

<sup>2</sup> Attrition is a scholastic term, not known to be earlier than the thirteenth century, denoting a state of mind in which the sinner desires pardon, from the mere apprehension of punishment, but without any higher motive. It is taught in the Catechism of the Council of Trent, a manual provided by papal authority for instructing ordinary

<sup>3</sup> EDDIUS. XV. Scrip. 73. MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 151. Both writers, as might be expected from their papal prejudices, make Theodore deeply repentant for his conduct to Wilfrid.

<sup>4</sup> BED. v. 20. p. 443.

<sup>5</sup> Ib. 444.

saw a very meritorious labourer in the Gospel vineyard<sup>1</sup>. He wrote accordingly, in his favour to the court of Northumberland, and Wilfrid, restored to his bishopric, was again tempted by prosperity. At first his jurisdiction did not reach its original extent: but he shortly regained spiritual authority over the whole Northumbrian dominions. Unhappily, however, his intractable, haughty spirit, had not even yet been sufficiently disciplined: he could not bend himself to the canons enacted under Theodore, or endure the conversion of his beloved monastic foundation, at Ripon, into an episcopal see<sup>2</sup>. These new displays of turbulence induced the king to call the prelacy together. It was a full meeting, headed by Brihtwald, successor to Theodore, and under its authority, Wilfrid was once more driven into exile<sup>3</sup>. His age was now verging upon seventy, but anger and impatience yet roused him into activity. He hastened again to Rome; and, regardless of the contempt poured by his countrymen upon papal interference on a former occasion, laid his case before the pontiff, and pleaded strenuously for a favourable judgment. His exertions having prevailed, he made another experiment upon the authorities of Northumbria. This was firmly, but courteously repelled. After due deliberation, the king expressed his resolution to abide by the decisions of former sovereigns, made, as they were, under sanction of the prelacy, regularly convened, with two successive

<sup>1</sup> "Quia longo tempore propriis orbatus substantiis inter Paganos in Domino multum laboravit." Theodorus Ethelredi Regi Merciorum.—EDDIUS. XV. Scrip. 74.

<sup>2</sup> "Secunda est (causa dissensionis) ut monasterium supradictum, quod in privilegium nobis

donabatur, in episcopalem sedem transmutatur."—EDDIUS. XV. Sc. 75.

<sup>3</sup> "Cum sancto Berthwaldo Archiepiscopo, et totius pene Britanniae Episcopis."—Ib. BED. v. 20. p. 444.

metropolitans at its head. Of Wilfrid's cause he desired to hear no more. Dying soon after, while his son was yet a boy, a bold usurper seized the throne. To him Wilfrid immediately applied, but was peremptorily ordered to quit the kingdom within six days, with all his adherents, under pain of death. The youthful heir, however, soon supplanted him, and Wilfrid now was partially successful. A synod assembled on the banks of the Nidd, which Elfleda, an abbess, paternal aunt to the young king, enlightened by a speech, painting her brother's remorse, before death, on account of Wilfrid, and his determination, if life had been spared, to restore him'. The fathers were not wholly proof against such testimony from a lady, and a nun. They allowed Wilfrid the see of Hexham and the abbey of Ripon, which he held peaceably during the remaining four years of his agitated life<sup>2</sup>. His indefatigable zeal for Italian usages, and repeated calls for papal interference, were naturally thought, in the course of years, an ample title to Romish invocation. St. Wilfrid's tutelage was, accordingly, long implored in northern England.

The sainted prelate has been industriously paraded as an authority of high antiquity for appeals to Rome. He furnishes, undoubtedly, the first known English example of them. But his history shows them to have been uniformly treated with utter contempt, and this not only by the civil authorities, but also by the ecclesiastical. Wilfrid's case is really, therefore, fatal to the very cause that leans upon it for support. He obviously sought

---

<sup>1</sup> EDDIUS. XV. Script. 84, 85, | shire, and was buried at Ripon, in
86. | Yorkshire.—WHARTON de Episc.

<sup>2</sup> BED. 447. Wilfrid died in | Dunelm. Angl. Sacr. i. 695. Sax.
709, at Oundle, in Northampton- | Chr. 61.

papal interference, as a mere experiment for his own selfish ends. There was a rising deference for the Roman see, and it might serve him. The reasons for his own adoption of the foreign party are obvious. A vain, irritable, clever boy, impatient of a step-mother, finds refuge at court, and is caressed by a princess, who made Roman views a point of conscience, and enlivened her matrimonial life by arguing them with her husband. The favoured lad, when a little tired of court, tries the variety of a monastery, as attendant upon a devout paralytic. Having enough of this, he dwells upon the doctrines of his royal patroness, and plans an Italian tour to learn something more about them. Caressed and flattered all the way, smitten too by a refinement such as he never saw at home, he returns enchanted by everything Roman. His foreign principles and accomplishments now recommend him for tutor to the son of the princess, who had so largely befriended him. He next figures as a principal in the triumph so ridiculously given by her husband, to the opinions for which she had contended through life. To these opinions he then looks repeatedly for keeping him master of very great possessions; the cherished means both of indulging in personal ostentation, and a magnificent liberality. It is quite easy to understand all this course of events, without assuming any established recognition of papal authority.

In Wilfrid's time England legally became a Christian commonwealth. A legislative assembly, holden under Ina, king of the West Saxons<sup>1</sup>, imposed fines upon parents neglecting the timely baptism of their infants<sup>2</sup>,

<sup>1</sup> About the year 693.—JOHN-SON, sub ann.

<sup>2</sup> Unless a child were baptized within thirty days, the father was and upon labour on Sundays<sup>1</sup>. It also gave the privilege of sanctuary to churches, made perjury before a bishop highly penal<sup>2</sup>, placed episcopal and royal residences upon the same footing as to housebreakers<sup>3</sup>, and recognised baptismal relationship by pecuniary satisfactions<sup>4</sup>. About the same time Wihtred, king of Kent, in two meetings of his legislature, one holden at Bapchild<sup>5</sup>, the other at Berghamsted<sup>6</sup>, confirmed churches in all properties and to be fined as many shillings; if it died before baptism, he was to forfeit all his possessions.

<sup>1</sup> A slave, working on Sunday by his lord's order, was to become free, and the lord was to pay thirty shillings; by his own will, he was to be whipped, or pay a pecuniary compensation instead.

<sup>2</sup> "This was one reason for the bishops sitting on the temporal bench with the alderman, viz., to tender necessary oaths in the most solemn manner; for the English, in this age, were under the greatest awe of falsifying an oath taken on the bishop's hand, or on a cross holden in his hand."—JOHNSON.

<sup>3</sup> 120 shillings was to be the satisfaction for this offence in either case. The next case mentioned is the breaking into an alderman's house. For this 80 shillings was the penalty.

<sup>4</sup> The compensation for killing a godson, or a godfather, was to be made to the survivor, just as if the parties had been related in blood.

<sup>5</sup> Becanceld, or Baccanceld, is the Saxon name of this place: "now called Bapchild, near to Sittingbourn, on the Canterbury side, being about midway between the coast of Kent and London, and therefore a very convenient place for a Kentish council. At this place, not many years since, were the visible remains of two chapels, standing very near to one another, on the right hand of the road from Canterbury to Sittingbourn. The present church stands on the opposite side, at no great distance from them. Dr. Plott, many years ago, observed to me, that this, and other circumstances, were good presumptions, that this was the old Baccanceld, the place for Kentish councils. The old Saxons very often wrote a simple c, where we now write and pronounce ch."—JOHNSON, sub ann. 692.

The Saxon Chronicle assigns the council at Bapchild to 694, and this date has been adopted by Spelman. Bede, however (v. 9. p. 400), says that Brihtwald, Theodore's successor, was elected to the see of Canterbury July 1, 692, Wihtred being then king of Kent. Johnson makes it appear that Wihtred began his reign in that very year; and the Saxon Chron. says, perhaps rather loosely, "as soon as he was king, he ordained a great council to meet in the place that is called Bapchild." Hence Johnson infers that 692 is the true date of this council.

<sup>6</sup> "Perhaps, now Bursted, or immunities bestowed upon them; allowed a veto to the archbishop, on the election of bishops and abbots; inflicted penalties on incontinence; lent solemnity to altars, by making them the places for manumitting slaves and taking oaths; and fined the profanation of Sunday<sup>1</sup>, idolatrous offerings, and the eating of flesh on fast-days.

The laws of Ina record also England's earliest known enactment for supplying the exigences of public worship, anciently provided-for by oblations upon the altar. When whole communities became Christian, such contributions would not only be precarious, but also often most unfairly levied. Ina's legislature wisely commuted voluntary offerings for a regular assessment upon houses. Every dwelling was to be valued at Christmas; and the rate so imposed, called church-shot, was payable on the following Martinmas. Money being scarce, the payment was made in produce; usually in grain or seed, but sometimes in poultry. Defaulters were to be fined forty shillings, and to pay the church-shot twelvefold<sup>2</sup>. This pious care of divine ministrations may be considered as the legal origin of church-rates. Thus, earlier than almost any of English written laws, appears on record a legislative Barsted, near Maidstone." (JOHNSON, sub ann. 696.) Chauncy, who assigns 697, the fifth year of Wihtred, as the date of the council, supposes it to have been holden at Berkhamsted, in Hertfordshire, where "the kings of Mercia often resided and kept their court." A place within the bounds of Kent, however, seems more likely to have been chosen by a Kentish prince.

---

<sup>1</sup> Sunday was reckoned from sunset on Saturday, until sunset on Sunday. A remnant of this ancient reckoning is, perhaps, yet to be found in the half-holidays usual in schools on Saturdays. Wihtred's council was not quite so strict as that of Ina, inasmuch as lords making their slaves work on Sundays did not thereby lose their property in them necessarily, being merely liable to pay a satisfaction of 80 shillings.

<sup>2</sup> LL. INÆ, 4, 10. SPELM. i. 184, 185. WILK. i. 59. JOHNSON, sub ann. 693.

provision for the due performance of holy offices. It is true that Ina's laws were only legally binding within the limits of his own dominions; but such of them, probably, as bore upon religion, were soon admitted by usage, or express enactment, in every petty state around. Church-shot, accordingly, makes repeated appearances among Anglo-Saxon legislative acts. Of these, the latest even, is far anterior to any muniment producible by a private family.

The sacred and inalienable right of God's ministers to maintenance, appears not among the laws of Ina. This omission is understood as evidence, that poverty's most important claim on opulence<sup>1</sup> was provided-for already, and not unwillingly, by means of tythes<sup>2</sup>. These had, indeed, been rendered in every age, and under every religion<sup>3</sup>. Hence their origin, probably, as-

<sup>1</sup> Let any observer cast his eye upon a considerable country congregation, and he must feel that very few present either do, or can pay anything in support of the public worship and instruction by which all are benefiting. To say nothing, therefore, of relief, local expenditure, and assistance of various kinds, which an endowed ministry confers upon rural districts, it is plainly the only means of securing to them a supply of sound religious knowledge.

<sup>2</sup> "We cannot doubt but tythes were paid in England, at this time, and before: Boniface, in the year 693, was twenty years of age (he was born 670); and he testifies that tythes were paid in the English church, in his letter to Cuthbert; and there is reason to believe that they were paid freely and fully, or else this king (Ina), who made so severe a law for paying the church-scot, would have made a severer for paying tythes, as some kings did, some hundred years after this, when the people's first fervours abated. The church-scot was a new taxation, and therefore not readily paid; tythes were from the beginning, and therefore paid without repining."—JOHNSON, sub ann. 693.

<sup>3</sup> "In Arabia, we find a law whereby every merchant was obliged to offer the tenth of his frankincense, which was the chief product and commodity of this country, to the god Sabis. (PLIN. Nat. Hist. l. xii. c. 14.) The Carthaginians sent the tythe of their spoils taken in the Sicilian war to Hercules of Tyre. (JUSTIN. l. xviii. c. 7.) The Ethiopians cends to that patriarchal faith, which ever shed a glimmering ray over even the most benighted branches of paid tythes to their god Assabinus. (PLIN. l. xii. c. 19.) The Grecian army which was conducted by Xenophon, in their memorable retreat after the death of Cyrus, reserved a tenth of their money to be dedicated to Apollo at Delphi, and Diana at Ephesus. (XENOPH. de Exp. Cyr. l. v.) When the Greeks had driven the Persians out of their country, they consecrated a golden tripod, made of the tenths of their spoils, to Delphian Apollo. (DIOD. SIC. l. xi.) The inhabitants of the isle Siphnus presented every year the tenths of the gold and silver digged out of their mines to the same god. (PAUSAN. Phoc.) The Athenians, and their confederates, dedicated a buckler of gold out of the tenths of the spoils taken at Tanagra to Jupiter. (Ib. Eliac. á.) And the Athenians dedicated a chariot and horses of old, made out of another tenth, to Pallas. (HEROD. l. v. c. 77.) When Cyrus had conquered Lydia, Cræsus advised him to prevent his soldiers from plundering the goods of the Lydians, ὡς σφέα ἀναγκαίως ἔχειν δεκατευθῆναι τῷ Διῷ, because they were of necessity to be tythed to Jupiter. (Ib. l. i.) The Crotonians vow to give a tenth of the spoils which they should take in their war with the Locrians, to Delphian Apollo. (JUSTIN. l. xx. c. ult.) Sylla, the Roman general, dedicated the tenth of all his estate to Hercules. (PLUTARCH. Sylla.) And the same was done by M. Crassus. (Ib. Crasso.) And we are told by Plutarch (Roman Quæst.) that this was a constant custom at Rome. Hercules himself is said to have dedicated to the gods the tenth of the spoils which he took from Geryon. (DIONYS. HALICARN. l. i.) When Camillus sacked Veii, a city of Hetruria, the soldiers seized the spoils for their own use, without reserving the accustomed tenth for the gods. After this, the augurs discovered, by their observations on the sacrifices, that the gods were exceedingly offended; whereupon the senate of Rome required all the soldiers to account upon oath for the spoils which they had taken, and to pay a tenth of them, or the full value: all which, with a golden cup of eight talents, was conveyed to Apollo's temple at Delphi by three men of the first quality in Rome. (PLUTARCH. Camillo.) And lastly, we are informed by Festus, that the ancients offered to their gods the tythes of all things without any exception." —(POTTER'S Discourse of Church Government. Lond. 1707, p. 430.) From this general usage, the Greeks, we learn from Harpocration, understood δεκατεύσαι, to tythe, as it were καθιεροῦν, to consecrate; ἐπειδὴ περ ἕθος ἦν Ἑλληνικὸν τὰς δεκάτας τῶν περιγυνομένων τοῖς Θεοῖς καθιεροῦν, since it was the Grecian custom to consecrate the tythes of their acquisitions to the gods.—HARPOC. in voc. Δεκατεύειν. Ed. MAUSSAC. Par. 1614, p. 76. See also Sir HENRY SPELMAN'S Larger Treatise concerning Tythes. Lond. 1647, p. 114, et seq.—Dr. COM-

Adam's posterity<sup>1</sup>. Conversion to Christianity strengthened pagan prejudice in favour of this appropriation. It was the very provision, expressly enjoined by God, for that Levitical establishment which an evangelical ministry had superseded. Men were accordingly exhorted to consecrate the tenth of their substance as a religious duty, and tender consciences obediently heard a call so strong in Scriptural authority—so familiar even to heathen practice. The Anglo-Saxons had been, as usual, prepared for such appeals after conversion, by habit previously formed<sup>2</sup>. They seem also to have found the tenth esteemed God's portion among British Christians<sup>3</sup>;

BER'S Historical Vindication of the Divine Right of Tythes. Lond. 1685, Part 1. ch. iii. p. 29.

<sup>1</sup> "They who are guided by chance, or fancy, and act without any certain and fixed rule, cannot be supposed to agree in the same manner of acting; and, therefore, since the most distant nations, many of whom do not appear to have had any intercourse with one another, agreed in dedicating an exact Tenth, we can scarce derive this consent from any other principle, beside the tradition of Adam, or Noah, or some other Patriarch, who lived before the dispersion from Babel; and it can scarce be conceived, that any of the Patriarchs should enjoin the observation of this tradition upon the whole race of mankind, without a Divine precept for it."—POTTER, p. 428.

<sup>2</sup> It appears from Sidonius Apollinaris, that the Saxon pirates were in the habit of sacrificing the tenth captive to their gods. (COMBER, 190.) Their captives were, in fact, merchandise. Malmesbury tells us (de Gest. RR. Angl. Script. post Bed. f. 6.) that Cedwalla, king of the West Saxons, baptized in 686, tythed all his warlike spoils taken even before baptism. "Inter hæc arduum memoratu est, quantum etiam ante baptismum inservierit pietati, ut omnes manubias, quas jure prædatorio in suos usus transcriperat, Deo decimaret." This statement gives room for inferring that tything was familiar to the pagan Saxons, and hardly allows a doubt of its establishment among the Christians of Wessex in 686.

<sup>3</sup> This may be inferred from the following tale related of Augustine, the Kentish apostle. When preaching in Oxfordshire, a village priest addressed him thus:—"Father, the lord of this place refuses to pay tythes, and my threats of excommunication only increase his obstinacy." Augustine then tried his powers of persuasion, but the lord replied, it is highly probable, therefore, that the silence of Ina upon clerical maintenance merely resulted from general acquiescence in a system which immemorial usage prescribed, and Scripture sanctioned'.

“Did not I plough and sow the land? The tenth part belongs to him who owns the remaining nine.” It was now time for mass, and Augustine, turning to the altar, said, “I command every excommunicated person to leave the church.” Immediately a pallid corpse arose from beneath the doorway, stalked across the churchyard, and stood motionless beyond its boundary. The congregation, gazing in horror and affright, called Augustine’s attention to the spectre. He did not choose, however, to break off the service. Having concluded, he said, “Be not alarmed. With cross and holy water in hand, we shall know the meaning of this.” He then went forward, and thus accosted the ghastly stranger:—“I enjoin thee, in the name of God, tell me who thou art?” The ghost replied, “In British times I was lord here; but no warnings of the priest could ever bring me to pay my tythes. At length he excommunicated me, and my disembodied soul was thrust into hell. When the excommunicated were bidden to depart, your attendant angels drove me from my grave.” Augustine’s power was now exerted in raising the excommunicating priest from his narrow resting-place; and having thus a second spectre before him, he asked, “Know you this person?” The unearthly clergyman replied, “Full well, and to my cost.” He was then reminded by Augustine of God’s mercy, and of the departed lord’s long torture in hell; a scourge was put into his hand, the excommunicated party knelt before him, received absolution, and then quietly returned to the grave. His own return thither soon followed, although Augustine, desirous of his assistance in preaching the Gospel, would fain have prayed for a renewed term of life.—BROMTON. X. Script. 736.

Besides the inference to be drawn from this apocryphal story, Germanus and Lupus are said, on the authority of Giraldus Cambrensis, to have taught the Britons “to pay their tythes partly to the bishop, and partly to their baptismal church.”—COMBER, 183.

<sup>1</sup>The Mosaical provision for God’s ministers is obviously a reasonable precedent for the guidance of Christians. Express authority for this particular provision could hardly find a place in the New Testament, both because its several portions appeared as circumstances called for them, and because it was important to avoid all appearance of interfering with vested rights. Now, no questions as to the fixed maintenance of an established ministry could have arisen while the Apostles lived, and prospective claims to the endowments prescribed by Moses would only have given occasion for representing Christian principles

Other facilities for spreading religion, and secular information also, were now generally provided by means of monasteries. Rarely was a prince converted, or awakened to a serious concern for eternity, without signaling his altered state by one or more of these foundations. This munificence was highly beneficial to society. An age of barbarism and insecurity required such cloistered retreats for nurturing, concentrating, and protecting the peaceful luminaries of learning and religion. From the convent-gate, heralds of salvation went forth to evangelize the country<sup>1</sup>. Undoubtedly, monasteries found for fanaticism both a nursery and an asylum: within their walls were trained and sheltered ascetic monks, perhaps even more abundantly than active teachers. These latter were however cheaply purchased at the price of moderate encouragement for the former. Religious enthusiasm arises, besides, from a mental unhealthiness, common in every age, and often far from unproductive of real good. A place of refuge, therefore, and regular control, for spirits impatient under sober piety, would frequently render important public service. In earlier portions of the Anglo-Saxon period, such monastic services were unalloyed by any approach towards that extensive system of organization which eventually became so mischievous. Benedict of Nursia had indeed, appeared<sup>2</sup>, and Wilfrid seems to have as a mere device for spoiling the Jewish priesthood. The general right, however, of a Christian clergy to competent maintenance is established by the practice and express permission of Jesus, and by various texts in the epistles.—ST. MATT. xxvii. 55, 56. Ib. x. 9, 10. ST. LUKE, viii. 2, 3. Ib.

---

x. 7. Ib. xxii. 35. Acts iv. 37. Gal. vi. 6. Phil. iv. 18. 2 Thess. iii. 9. 1 Cor. ix. 14. 1 Tim. v. 17, 18.

<sup>1</sup> BED. iv. 27. pp. 348, 349.

<sup>2</sup> Benedict was born in 480, and died in 542 or 543.—CAVE. Hist. Lit. Lond. 1688, p. 402.

claimed the merit of introducing his regulations into England<sup>1</sup>. Such introduction must, however, have been incomplete and partial, for Dunstan was unquestionably the father of British Benedictines<sup>2</sup>. Earlier monasteries gave no promise of that powerful confederacy which, in after ages, riveted the chains of papal domination.

That intellectual advance by which Theodore had obliged so deeply his adopted country, was undoubtedly promoted by the prevailing passion for pilgrimages to Rome. Man's natural thirst for novelty and variety intrenched itself under cover of Christian zeal. Impatience of home, and restless curiosity to visit foreign regions, were treated as a holy anxiety for worshipping on the spots where apostles taught, and their bones repose. Persons of both sexes, and of every rank, found religious excuses for journeying to the ancient seat of empire<sup>3</sup>. There, however, yet lingered a higher civilization, and more extensive knowledge, than in any other city of western Europe. Constant intercourse with a spot so favoured, must have brought considerable improvements in manners, understanding, and information. Still, there were countervailing evils: many of the pilgrims proved unequal to their own guidance in common decency, when removed completely away from domestic restraints. Females left their native shores, alleging an uncontrollable impulse of piety. In hardly any city on the way to Rome were not some of these unhappy women living by prostitution: even nuns were among the travelling devotees thus earning the wages of infamy. Serious minds became deeply scandalized by the frequency of such disgraceful spectacles ; hence Boniface, archbishop of Mentz, recommended the prohibition of English female pilgrimages, by royal and synodical authority<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> MALMESB. de Gest. PP. Script. post Bed. f. 151.

<sup>2</sup> OSBERN. de Vit. S. Dunst. Angl. Sacr. ii. 91.

<sup>3</sup> BED. v. 7. p. 395.

Of Anglo-Saxons importantly benefited by intercourse with Rome, no one obtained more credit in his day than Aldhelm, a near kinsman probably to the sovereigns of Wessex<sup>2</sup>. His education was conducted chiefly by Adrian, the learned friend of Archbishop Theodore, and he made a proficiency highly honourable to both parties. Having gained a great literary reputation, he was chosen to write in favour of the Roman Easter, at a conference with the Britons on that much-litigated question: his arguments are said to have made many converts<sup>3</sup>. He had already visited Rome by the invitation of Sergius I.<sup>4</sup>; and a mind like his must have brought home stores of valuable information. After Aldhelm had long been abbot of Malmesbury, he was advanced to the newly-founded see of Sherborne; which he held

<sup>1</sup> Epist. Bonif. ad Cuth. Archiep. Cantuar. SPELM. Conc. i. 241. WILK. i. 93.

<sup>2</sup> "Aldelmus Saxonum oriundus prosapia, familia haud dubie nobilissima. Ferunt quidam, incertum unde id assumpserint, fuisse nepotem Inæ regis West-Saxonem ex fratre Kentero."—MALMESB. de Vitâ Aldhelm. Episc. Scireburn. Angl. Sacr. ii. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. 15. This work of Aldhelm's appears to have been unknown to Malmesbury. Mr. Stevenson considers it to be the letter to Geruntius, king of Cornwall, and his clergy, printed among the epistles of Boniface. (BEDE. H.E. 378.) Malmesbury says of the Britons:—"Suis potius quam Romanis obsecundarent traditionibus. Et plura quidem alia Catholica, sed illud potissimum abnuebant; ne Paschale sacrum legitimo die celebrarent." (14.) A more extensive knowledge of our own British traditions would not only be very interesting, but also serviceable in refuting various pretensions of the Romanists.

<sup>4</sup> "Aldhelm's visit to Rome cannot be placed earlier than A.D. 688, because Sergius had only been raised to the papal chair in the course of the preceding year."—WRIGHT'S Biog. Brit. Literaria. Lond. 1842, p. 216.

during the remaining four years of his life. He seems to have been the first Anglo-Saxon who composed in Latin<sup>1</sup>. A period little dignified by literature was naturally proud of such an author, and his principal theme long enjoyed great popularity. He sang the Praises of Virginity, and set them forth besides in prose. Aldhelm's verse is turgid and obscure, but better than his prose.

Far more illustrious is the fame of a contemporary scholar. Bede, universally and justly called the Venerable, was born in the modern bishopric of Durham, in 674, or thereabouts, upon an estate belonging to Benedict Biscop's foundations at Wearmouth and Jarrow. In these two monasteries, learning, teaching, and writing, he passed agreeably the whole of his laborious, distinguished, and blameless life, from the age of seven years. His first instructor was the learned Biscop himself, at once founder and abbot, whose noble library proved a treasure from which he drew incessantly happiness, occupation, and glory. That excellent superior, so fortunate in furnishing a study for Bede, did not live to complete his admirable pupil's education. The young scholar then passed under the tuition of Ceolfrid, abbot after Biscop<sup>2</sup>. The times were highly favourable for his proficiency; Theodore and Adrian, the lights of Britain, surviving through his earlier years<sup>3</sup>. At nineteen he

---

<sup>1</sup> "Primus ex Anglorum gente erat, juxta Cambdenum, qui Latine scripsit, primusque componendi carminis Latine rationem populares suos docuit."—(CAVE. Hist. Lit. 466.) When Aldhelm was made abbot of Malmesbury is uncertain, but it seems to have been after 680. He was chosen bishop of Sherborne, in 705. His death occurred May 25, 709.—WRIGHT. 216.

<sup>2</sup> BED. de seipso. Eccl. Hist. p. 492.

<sup>3</sup> STUBBS. X. Script. col. 1695.

was ordained deacon; at thirty, priest. When free from professional calls and monastic observances, his industry as a divine, and general man of letters, was inexhaustible. Scripture was his favourite study; but he seems to have explored most eagerly every branch of knowledge within reach. Sergius, the Roman pontiff, would fain have had personal assistance from so ripe a scholar upon some unknown emergency<sup>1</sup>; but his death soon after seems to have released Bede from the necessity of leaving home. He remained steadily secluded in his monastery, attesting the diligent employment of his time by a long and rapid succession of literary works. Among these, the theological portions are little else than selections from the Fathers, especially St. Austin. Englishmen, however, long considered Bede as their principal divine. The collections, therefore, stamped with his venerable name, form a copious repository of national religious tradition. In this view they are highly valuable, for they supply decisive evidence, in many particulars, against Romish claims to the ancient faith of England. Bede's fame has chiefly rested, in later ages, upon his Ecclesiastical History, an invaluable record of interesting events, compiled from ancient monuments, tradition, and personal knowledge<sup>2</sup>. A monastic author in the eighth century could hardly fail of intermingling his narrative with superstitious tales. The venerable monk of Jarrow presents many such indications of his profession and age. Fastidious moderns have, accordingly, taxed him with credulity; objections have also been made to his loose and incidental mention of secular

---

<sup>1</sup> MALMESB. de Gest. RR. Angl. | haps, inconclusively. H. E. In-
 (Script. post Bedam, vi. 11.) Mr. | trad. xi.
 Stevenson disputes this; but, per- | <sup>2</sup> BED. de seipso, ut supra.

affairs; he professed, however, only to preserve the annals of religion. He had, probably, but little taste for investigating the mazes of selfish policy, and chronicling the outrages of licentious violence; he might even think such details unsuitable to the monastic profession, and to a Christian minister. Still he has preserved a great mass of civil information, and may be justly venerated as the Father of English History. Nor is it among the least recommendations of his interesting annals, that in them appear so many traces of Britain's ancient church. A papal partisan bears witness that paganized England was more than half evangelized by the holy zeal of British missionaries. To Rome Bede was indebted for education, religious usages, and a library. She formed all his early prejudices, and filled him through life with grateful partiality. Yet, as a mere historian, it has been his fortune to weaken importantly the pleading of her advocates. On the verge of senility, Bede was attacked with asthma. The disorder became troublesome one year at Easter; and about dawn, on Ascension-day, he placidly observed his end approaching. When thus anticipating a speedy call to account for talents improved so nobly, he felt anxious to complete a vernacular version of St. John's Gospel<sup>1</sup>. As the sun rose, accordingly, he entreated his disciples to write diligently from his dictation. He was mournfully obeyed until nine o'clock, when all but one youth left him, to join the procession usual on that day. "A single chapter still remains," the lad remarked; "dearest master, will it distress you if I ask you to go on with its translation?" The dying scholar answered, "By no means; take your pen, but write quickly." As time thus wore away, the venerable translator said, "There are a few pleasing trifles in my desk; a little pepper, some scarves, and incense; run, bring them to me, and call my brother-priests; I would fain distribute among these friends such little marks of my kind regard as God has given me. Rich men's presents are gold and silver, or other costly things; mine must be recommended by the affectionate pleasure with which I give them." The young amanuensis did as he was bidden, and the dim eyes of his admired instructor soon rested upon a circle of weeping friends. "You will see my face no more," Bede said, "on this side of another world. It is time that my spirit should return to Him who gave it. My life has been long, and a gracious Providence has made it happy. The time of my dissolution is now at hand: I have a desire to depart and to be with Christ." Such pious and affecting language the youth, whose writing had been broken off, thus abruptly terminated: "My dear master, one sentence has not even yet been written." He was answered, "Make haste and write it, then." This done, the sinking teacher said, "It is finished. Take my head, and turn my face to the spot where I have been used to pray. Glory to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." His lips immediately ceased to move, and every saddened eye now saw that the most illustrious of Europe's luminaries was gone to his reward<sup>1</sup>. Bede's remains

---

<sup>1</sup> MALMESB. ut supra, f. 12.

<sup>1</sup> SIM. DUNELM. Epist. de Transitu Bedæ. X. Script. col. 10. Bede's death, though sometimes placed later, certainly took place, May 27, 735. He died on Holy Thursday, and May 27. These two requisites for fixing the date occurred in 735. (WRIGHT. 268.)

The origin of venerable, affixed to the name of Bede, is not known, but this designation seems ancient; for the second council of Aix-la-Chapelle, holden in 836, citing in its preface his mystical explanation of Solomon's temple, thus describes him: "Venerabilis et were first interred at Jarrow; but each revolving year increasing the splendour of his fame, monkish cupidity was eager to provide him with a more conspicuous tomb. His bones were accordingly transferred by stealth to Durham, and enclosed in the same coffin with those of saintly Cuthbert<sup>1</sup>.

One of Bede's most illustrious friends was Egbert, consecrated to the see of York, in 732<sup>2</sup>. This admirable prelate's father was Eata, cousin to Ceolwulf, the victorious king of Northumbria<sup>3</sup>. That prince's military fame proved no security against religious melancholy. With Bede he had holden frequently delightful converse; and, amidst the successful din of arms, he sighed for peaceful piety like his. Following, accordingly, no fewer than seven precedents among Anglo-Saxon kings, he buried his talents for active life under the monotonous austerities of a cloister<sup>4</sup>. His kinsman Eata had two sons, Eadbert and Egbert: of these, the former was probably educated for the royal dignity; the latter was placed in a monastery during infancy. When a youth, Egbert went to Rome with his brother Egred, who did not live to return, and he was there ordained deacon<sup>5</sup>. When chosen to the see of York, Ceolwulf, who yet reigned, desired him to seek the complimentary pall<sup>6</sup>,—a mark of deference to Rome paid by no one modernis temporibus doctor admirabilis Beda presbyter."—LABB. et COSS. vii. 1760.

<sup>1</sup> STUBBS. X. Script. col. 1696.

<sup>2</sup> Upon the year of Egbert's consecration, ancient writers differ, but they unanimously place his death in 766. This consent is decisive as to the year of his promotion to York. Alcuin says of him, Rexit hic ecclesiam triginta et quatuor annis.—De Pontiff. et SS. Eccl. Ebor. Opp. ii. 254.

<sup>3</sup> SIM. DUNELM. X. Script. col. 11.

<sup>4</sup> HUNTINGDON. Script. post Bedam, f. 195.

<sup>5</sup> SIM. DUNELM. ut supra.

<sup>6</sup> "Regnante Ceolwulfo atque jubente, primus post Paulinum, of his predecessors since Paulinus. For this purpose, Egbert again visited the papal city, and returning with the customary recognition of archiepiscopal dignity, became eminent for professional learning, and for a noble patronage of literature. Besides taking an active part in tuition, he compiled some useful manuals of ecclesiastical discipline<sup>1</sup>, and prepared for the use of his clergy a vernacular Penitential<sup>2</sup>, in which human iniquities are particularized, often with disgusting minuteness, a corresponding penance being prescribed for every sin. Egbert's judicious munificence led him likewise to shed a lustre on York, by the formation there of an ample library<sup>3</sup>, always an important benefit, but especially so when literary appliances are scarce and costly<sup>4</sup>. This accepto ab apostolica sede pallio.”

—SIM. DUNELM. ut supra.

<sup>1</sup> Dialogus Egberti de Ecclesiastica Institutione. (WILK. Conc. i. 82.) Excerptiones D. Egberti, Ebor. Archiep. Ib. i. 101. SPELM. Conc. i. 258.

<sup>2</sup> WILK. Conc. i. 113. At the end of the table of contents of the first book is a paragraph thus translated:—These capitulars Ecgbyrht, archbishop in Eofornic, turned from Latin into English, that the unlearned might the more easily understand it.

<sup>3</sup> Epist. Alc. ad Carol. August. ap. MALMESBURY de Gest. PP. Angl. Scriptores post Bedam, f. 153.

<sup>4</sup> The following is a catalogue of the principal articles in this collection, by Alcuin, Egbert's librarian, himself:—

Illic invenies veterum vestigia patrum, Quicquid habet pro se Latio Romanus in orbe,
Græcia vel quicquid transmisit clara
Latinis:

Hebraicus vel quod populus bibit imbre
superno,

Africa lucifluo vel quicquid lumine sparsit.

Quod Pater Hieronymus, quod sensit
Hilarius, atque
Ambrosius Præsul, simul Augustinus, et ipse

Sanctus Athanasius, quod Orosius edit avitus:

Quicquid Gregorius summus docet, et
Leo Papa,

Basilius quicquid, Fulgentius atque coruscant,

Cassiodorus item, Chrysostomus atque
Johannes.

Quicquid et Althelmus docuit, quid Beda
Magister,

Quæ Victorinus scripsere, Boëtius, atque Historici veteres, Pompeius, Plinius, ipse

Acer Aristoteles, Rhetor quoque Tullius, ingens.

Quid quoque Sedulius, vel quid canit ipse Juvenius,

Alcuinus, et Clemens, Prosper, Paulinus, Arator,

Quid Fortunatus, vel quid Lactantius edunt.

Quæ Maro Virgilius, Statius, Lucanus, et Auctor

Artis grammaticæ, vel quid scripsere
Magistri;

Quid Probus, atque Pocas, Donatus,
*Priscianus*ve, invaluable prelacy, happily prolonged over thirty-four years, proved a lasting monument of superior abilities diligently used, and of ample wealth nobly viewed as an important public trust<sup>1</sup>.

Among the Excerpts of Egbert, is one prescribing a threefold division of tythes. From the first article in this collection, it appears that considerable progress had been already made in the settlement of a parochial clergy, but that popular eagerness for so great a benefit had outrun a sufficient provision for public worship<sup>2</sup>. Arrangements were probably made, in many cases, for appropriating a rural priest before a church was ready for his ministrations. Bishops might seem to have encouraged such arrangements, by surrendering their own portion of tythes. In Egbert's fifth Excerpt, accordingly, no mention is made of this portion. Clergymen are enjoined to expend one portion upon ornaments for their churches, another upon the poor and upon hospitality<sup>3</sup>: the third was to be their own<sup>4</sup>. This

---

Servius, Euticius, Pompeius, Commi-
anus.

Invenies alios perplures, lector, ibidem Egregios studiis, arte et sermone Magistros,

Plurima qui claro scripsere volumina sensu;

Nomina sed quorum præsentis in carmine
scribi

Longius est visum, quam plectri postulet usus.

ALCUINUS de Pontificibus et Sanctis
Eccl. Ebor. XV. Script. 730.

<sup>1</sup> The best edition of Egbert's remains is that by Mr. Thorpe, published in 1840, under the Record Commission, in the Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, vol. ii. p. 87, et sequ. Two of these pieces, the Dialogue and Excerpts, are wholly Latin; the Confessional and Penitential, which may be considered as a single work, are Latin, with Anglo-Saxon versions.

<sup>2</sup> "Let every priest build his own church with all diligence, and preserve the relics of the saints, watching over them by night, and performing divine offices."—JOHNSON'S Transl. sub ann. 740.

<sup>3</sup> Clergymen were, in fact, the innkeepers, as one may say, of those ancient times. Hence the 25th Excerpt stands thus in Johnson: "That bishops and priests have an house for the entertainment of strangers not far from the church."

<sup>4</sup> Johnson is inclined to question whether this Excerpt may not be more modern than Egbert.

injunction, however, is obviously destitute of legal authority: at the most, it can only rank among recommendations in episcopal charges<sup>1</sup>. Egbert's object was to lay before his clergy a code of instructions for their government, chiefly selected from foreign canonists<sup>2</sup>,

<sup>1</sup> "This work (Egbert's Excerpts) consists of one hundred and sixty-three canons, which are so far from being Anglo-Saxon canons, that, although some two or three are cited from Irish councils, not a single canon is quoted in them as of Anglo-Saxon origin; but with the exception of the first twenty-eight, which are copies, word for word, of different capitulars of the French bishops, between the years 789 and 816, the remaining hundred and thirty-five are all quoted either from the apostles or fathers, or some foreign council. Egbert died in 771: it is evident, therefore, that these canons have not so much as the sanction of being compiled for Egbert's use; that prelate having died long before these canons were promulgated in the French church. And from such a professed compilation as this from foreign sources, it must be evident that no historical fact, relative to our own country, can, with any show of reason, be deduced." (HALE'S Essay on the supposed existence of a Quadripartite and Tripartite Division of Tythes. Lond. 1832, p. 25.) The 5th Excerpt of Egbert is all but identical with the 73rd Canon, in a book of canons ascribed to Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury, and now among the C. C. C. C. MSS. Wanley, however, says, that this book really contains some rule upon the Benedictine principle, put together by an unknown author. To build arguments affecting the characters of past clergymen, and the interests of present, upon obscure compilation by unknown authors, is hardly reasonable.

<sup>2</sup> That foreign books were not only used, but also very loosely, appears plainly from the following Excerpt, the 7th:—"That all priests pray assiduously for the life and empire of our lord the emperor, and for the health of his sons and daughters." This is evidently a mere transcript from some book written abroad, without even the trouble taken of adaptation for domestic use. Many of the latter Excerpts are prefaced by a mention of the quarters which have supplied them. This is not the case, however, with that prescribing the threefold division of tythes; but probably Egbert had in his eye the 5th Canon of the first Council of Orleans, holden in 511, which provides:—"De oblationibus, vel agris, quos dominus noster rex ecclesiis suo munere conferre dignatus est, vel adhuc non habentibus Deo inspirante contulerit, ipsorum agrorum vel clericorum immunitate concessâ, id esse justissimum definimus, ut in reparationibus ecclesiarum, alimoniis sacerdotum, et pauperum, vel redemptionibus captivorum, quicquid Deus in fructibus dare and binding, as he thought, upon their consciences; domestic legislation, therefore, he naturally overlooked.

At York<sup>1</sup>, was born of noble parentage<sup>2</sup>, Alcuin, who called himself in Latin Albinus, and assumed, according to a fashion of contemporary scholars, the surname of Flaccus<sup>3</sup>. This eminent genius received personal instruction from Egbert, but his education was chiefly conducted by Elbert, Egbert's coadjutor in conducting the school, and successor in the archbishopric. Alcuin was Elbert's favourite pupil, and chosen by him as a companion on a journey abroad, in quest of books and information. When Elbert took the see of York, he ordained Alcuin deacon, and made him master of the cathedral seminary. On his death he left him in dignatus fuerit, expendatur." (LABB. et Coss. iv. col. 1405.) It is, however, worthy of remark, that the fathers at Orleans were very far from contemplating any such abuses as have pauperized and demoralized so extensively the lower classes of modern England. Their 16th Canon stands thus:—"Episcopus pauperibus, vel infirmis, qui debilitate faciente non possunt suis manibus laborare, victum et vestitum in quantum possibilitas habuerit, largiatur. (Ib. col. 1407.) Such, therefore, as would use the tripartite system to confiscate the generally slender maintenances of clergymen, for the payment of their own able-bodied servants, must not seek authority from the Council of Orleans. Persons of this kind may fairly be referred to the 37th Canon of the first book of Egbert's Penitential. (WILKINS. i. 123.) From this it might seem, that people paid every tenth scéal

(about equal to a groat), at Easter for religious purposes. A revival of this practice would probably answer all the calls for which a certain class of antiquaries would fain make provision from predial tythes alone.

<sup>1</sup> "Vos fragiles infantie mee annos materno fovistis affectu."—ALCUIN. Epist. ad Fratres Eboracenses. Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. iv. 163.

<sup>2</sup> "The anonymous biographer, who wrote not long after Alcuin's death (829), and who derived his information chiefly from Alcuin's pupil and friend, Sigulf, calls him (p. lx.) nobili gentis Anglorum exortus prosapia. We learn from himself that he was related to St. Willibrord."—LORENZ. Life of Alcuin, 249.

<sup>3</sup> Commentatio de Vita Beati Flacci Albini. xiii. Ejusd. Epist. ad Gundradam. i. 247. Opp. Ed. Froben. 1777.

charge of the library<sup>1</sup>. As a teacher, Alcuin succeeded admirably. His fame resounded on every side; and students, however distant, eagerly sought in York that instruction which no other master could supply<sup>2</sup>. His labours, however, were unexpectedly transferred from the ancient city for which they had gained so much celebrity. He went to Rome<sup>3</sup>, for the pall, now sought by Eanbald, formerly his pupil, who had been placed, on Elbert's death, in the see of York. In his way homeward, passing through Parma, he saw Charlemain, and that enlightened prince immediately became anxious to retain him<sup>4</sup>. The learned Anglo-Saxon, won by a desire so flattering, promised to return, if the king of his native land, and his friend, Eanbald, would admit of his departure. Their permissions gained, Alcuin reappeared, <sup>1</sup> Malmesbury's text gives an extract from one of Alcuin's letters reciting his testamentary appointment as librarian, but making the prelate's name, Egbert. (De Gest. RR. Angl. Script. post Bedam, f. 12. new ed. i. 94.) The Ratisbon edition, however, of Alcuin's works, which is far the best, has magister meus dilectus Helbrechtus archiepiscopus. (i. 64.) This is, undoubtedly, the correct reading. But Helbrechtus is Elbert, not Egbert. Alcuin's muse thus commemorates his master's love for the books, and his own custody of them:

*Tradidit ast alio caras super omnia gazas
Librorum nato, Patri qui semper adhæsit, Doctrinæ sitiens haurire fluentæ suetus.*
De Pontiff. et SS. Eccl. Ebor.
l. 125.

<sup>2</sup> "In those days, as in the times of antiquity, instruction was chiefly oral, the art of printing not having as yet given rise to the great and extensive prevalence of books. A school was, therefore, elevated into importance by the fame of an able teacher; and the flourishing institution at York derived this advantage from Alcuin: even foreigners resorted thither to pursue their theological studies."—LORENZ. 11.

<sup>3</sup> In 781. Elbert died in 780. Alcuin's journey for Eanbald's pall appears to have been his third visit to the continent. His first was the literary expedition made with Elbert, when he was about twenty. He then visited Rome. His second journey rests upon inference, and he seems, in the course of it, to have been first introduced to Charlemain.—LORENZ. 12, 250.

<sup>4</sup> Charlemain had wintered in Rome, and was returning homeward.—Ib. 12.

in 782, before the Frankish conqueror<sup>1</sup>. In that wonder of his day, as in Xenophon, Cæsar, and our own immortal Alfred, the glare of splendid military talents was tempered by the mild lustre of literary taste. Charlemain, accordingly, had no sooner secured the services of Alcuin, than he sought profit from them personally<sup>2</sup>. The potent and victorious chief, not only founded a school in his palace, under Alcuin's direction, but also became himself a pupil in it. Listening also to the learned Anglo-Saxon's judicious counsel, he rendered monastic foundations, under his control, efficient seminaries for spreading useful knowledge. Thus, all his extensive territories felt most beneficially the peaceful influence of a foreign scholar. Charlemain gratefully acknowledged, in grants of conventual dignities, the services thus rendered to his people and himself<sup>3</sup>. But Alcuin pined for home: his humble spirit merely sighed for pious exercises and learned labours, which he would fain have plied amid scenes familiar to his youthful eye. At length he was allowed, in 790, the pleasure of revisiting his native isle, to negotiate a treaty between Charlemain and the Mercian Offa<sup>4</sup>. The justly-celebrated Frank urged repeatedly his quick return; Alcuin,

<sup>1</sup> LORENZ. 14.

<sup>2</sup> "He was brought up after the ordinary manner of the French nobility, being taught the use of arms, and the usual athletic exercises of hunting, riding, and swimming. Intellectual cultivation was considered of so little importance for the future sovereign of a warlike people, that he did not even learn to write; and notwithstanding all the pains which he took in after-life to supply the deficiency, he never could attain to a ready and skilful use of the pen. Neither was he in his youth instructed in the Latin language: he understood it, indeed, as it was then commonly spoken in Gaul, but not according to rule, and the usage of the ancient Latin authors." —Ib. 18.

<sup>3</sup> He had the abbeys of Ferrières, and St. Lupus, at Troyes, assigned to him for defraying his necessary expenses.—Ib. 60, 257.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. 65.

however, was no less eager to remain, and nearly three years elapsed before he crossed again the sea, to live in splendour, yet in exile. Never afterwards could he gain permission to behold his beloved country: Charlemain even felt impatiently his absence from the court. At last he was gratified by an unwilling license of retirement to his abbey of St. Martin, at Tours, conferred upon him in 796, where soon assembled, from every quarter, but especially from England, a crowd of students<sup>1</sup>. On the termination of his religious and industrious career, he had attained the summit of literary fame<sup>2</sup>. The far more extended information of later times has, it is true, rendered his works valuable only as evidences and monuments. Long after his own day, however, Alcuin's name shone with a lustre that knew no eclipse, and which it could justly challenge. Nor ought it ever to be forgotten, that his powerful talents, directed to every known branch of learning, his unwearied industry, his holy piety, dispelled importantly the intellectual darkness of a barbarous age.

A zealous missionary, born at Crediton, in Devonshire, acknowledged his intellectual obligations to Rome, by an active and unusual assertion of the papal supremacy. This eminent ecclesiastic, originally named Winifrid, received a monastic education in his own country. When more than thirty, a noble impulse of piety led him to emulate his countryman, Willibrord, in

<sup>1</sup> Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. iv. 169, 179.

<sup>2</sup> Alcuin died in 804, at Tours. Hence it is hardly possible that he could have been Bede's disciple, which has been sometimes said. Bede died in 735. The date of Alcuin's birth is unknown, but it is commonly and probably placed in or about 735. The most complete and learned account of his life is that by Froben, prince-abbot of St. Emeram, at Ratisbon, prefixed to the edition of his works printed there, in 1777, in 2 vols. fol.

preaching the Gospel among the continental pagans<sup>1</sup>. Considerable success having waited on his labours in Batavia, he sought allowably the favourite recreation of a pilgrimage to Rome. He was greeted there with most gratifying applause, and sent back to the scenes of his former usefulness with recommendatory letters from the pope. In a subsequent visit to the pontifical city, he found his vanity further tempted, being consecrated bishop of the Germans, and distinguished by the name of Boniface<sup>2</sup>. Afterwards he was complimented by the pall, and appointed papal legate. In filling this latter office he displayed all his wonted ardour and activity, even going so far as to procure a synodical submission of Germany to the papal see—an unexpected return for their flattering civilities, highly delightful to the Romans<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> BED. v. 11. p. 407. Willibrord, after several enterprising journeys with his brother missionaries, returned into Friesland, where his preaching had already been very successful, in 693. He was consecrated afterwards to the see of Utrecht, and he died among the Batavians advanced in age.—MOSHEIM, Cent. 7. ch. i. vol. ii. See the note, new ed. p. 65.

<sup>2</sup> Boniface passed over into Friesland in 715. He was consecrated bishop by Gregory II. in 723, and made archbishop in 738. In his old age he returned to Friesland, being desirous of ending his days amid a people now relapsing, yet endeared to him by early success. He was, however, murdered there by the barbarous inhabitants in 755. He has been canonized, and commonly designated as the Apostle of Germany.

His archiepiscopal see was Mentz.—MOSHEIM, Cent. 8. ch. i. new ed. ii. 117; note. CAVE, Hist. Lit. 481.

<sup>3</sup> “Decrevimus autem in nostro synodali conventu, et confessi sumus fidem catholicam, et unitatem et subjectionem Romanæ ecclesiæ fine tenus vitæ nostræ velle servare Sancto Petro, et vicario ejus velle subjici, synodum per omnes annos congregare, metropolitanos pallia ab illâ sede quærere, et per omnia præcepta Petri canonicè sequi desiderare, ut inter oves sibi commendatas numeremur. Et isti confessioni universi consensimus, et subscripsimus, et ad corpus S. Petri, principis apostolorum direximus; quod gratulando clerus et pontifex Romanos suscepit.”—Epist. Bonifacii, Archiep. Mogunt. ad Cuthb. Archiep. Cantuar. SPELMAN, Conc. i. 237. WILK. i.

Boniface now seems to have become bent upon lowering the tone of his native country's independence, by winning it over to a similar submission. He was a personal friend of Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury, and to that prelate he transmitted a copy of the canons enacted by his own obsequious synod, together with a letter. In this, like too many religious reformers, he lowers the character of those whose opposition he was anxious to overcome. An epistle of like import was also addressed by him to Ethelbald, king of the Mercians. From these communications, it is plain enough that the Anglo-Saxons were abundantly tainted by the gross impurities of a barbarous age; nor do ascetic pretensions among them seem frequently to have been much else than a cloak for lasciviousness. Intercourse between the sexes appears to have been most imperfectly regulated by matrimonial ties; and the chastity of nuns was evidently not more inviolable than that of their country-women generally<sup>1</sup>. For the formal condemnation of such offensive and pernicious immorality, solemn synodical authority was probably desirable. Cuthbert accordingly procured the meeting of a numerous council at Cloveshoo<sup>2</sup>, in which the Mercian Ethelbald acted as president<sup>3</sup>.

91. LABB. et COSS Conc. vi. col. 1544.

<sup>1</sup> "Et adhuc, quod pejus esset, qui nobis narrant, adjiciunt, quod hoc scelus ignominie, maximè cum sanctis monialibus, et sacratis Deo virginibus, per monasterium commissum sit."—Epist. Bonif. ad Æthelbald. R. SPELM. Conc. i. 233. WILK. i. 88.

<sup>2</sup> "Cliff, at Hoo, Kent."—Dr. INGRAM'S Index to the Sax. Chr. 433. The Saxon Chronicle refers this council to 742, as also do the Evidences of Christ-church, Canterbury. Spelman, however, refers it to 747, which is most probably the correct date, being that standing in the preamble to the acts of the council.

<sup>3</sup> "Præsidente eidem concilio Ethelbaldo, rege Merciorum, cum Cuthberto, archiepiscopo Doroberniæ." (Evidentiæ Ecclesiæ Christi Cant. X. Script. 2209.) The Saxon Chronicle merely says that Ethelbald was there, which is also said in the Preamble. He probably

Before this assembly, two admonitory writings of Pope Zachary were read, and then explained in the vernacular tongue<sup>1</sup>: the deliberators abstained, however, from any submission to the Roman see. In several particulars his countrymen consented to follow Boniface; but they patriotically disregarded his example when it would have led them to compromise their dignity as a nation, by professing submission to a foreign ecclesiastical authority<sup>2</sup>.

The canons of Cloveshoo are, in fact, adapted chiefly for the correction of existing irregularities in morals and discipline. Their general tenor is highly favourable to the Roman Church, because they enjoin a strict uniformity with her offices and usages: they establish, however, a strong case against it. Priests were to learn how to construe the creed, the Lord's prayer, the offices of baptism, and the mass, for the sake of explaining these forms vernacularly<sup>3</sup>. At that period, Latin probably was far from unintelligible, even among the populace, in acted as a sort of chairman; but as the business was entirely ecclesiastical, the lead most likely was taken by Cuthbert, the archbishop.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Malmesbury saith, that this council was opened with the letters of Pope Zachary; but it does not appear what were the contents, if any such were; but by the archbishop's despatch of the canons of this council to Boniface, and not to Zachary, it seems most likely that these were some epistles of Zachary to Boniface; and most probably those congratulating the union of the French bishops to the see of Rome."—INETT. Hist. Engl. Ch. 175.

<sup>2</sup> "The French Benedictine monks ingenuously confess that Boniface was an over-zealous partisan of the Roman pontiff, and attributed more authority to him than was just and fitting. Their words, in their Histoire Littéraire de la France, tom. iv. p. 106, are as follow: 'Il exprime son dévouement pour le S. Siège quelquefois en des termes qui ne sont pas assez proportionnés à la dignité du caractère épiscopal.'"—MOSHEIM, Cent. viii. ch. i. note. Other notes in the new edition of Mosheim fully discuss Boniface's character. ii. 119.

<sup>3</sup> Can. Con. Cloves. 10. SPELM. i. 248. WILK. i. 96.

southern Europe<sup>1</sup>; but all of Teutonic origin, unless travelled or highly educated, must have been utterly unable to receive from it any accurate impression. Thus, it could hardly fail of being deplored by serious and intelligent observers, that ignorant persons, even among the clergy, evidently regarded religious offices rather as powerful charms, than as a reasonable service. It is lamentable, upon many accounts, that experience here was not allowed its natural operation in freeing northern Europe from the pernicious absurdity of a foreign ritual. It was a price rather dear, even for solid advantages of information and refinement, naturally flowing from constant intercourse with the ancient capital: an extravagant compensation for amusing rambles over Italy, under the sanctimonious guise of pilgrimages.

Another conspicuous evil of Anglo-Saxon deference for papal authority, was the use that artful men were sure to make of such a principle. Foremost, probably, in spurning alien interference when hostile to their own selfishness, they would eagerly invoke it under any temporary difficulty. To such a politician thus embarrassed, England owes the first public encouragement of papal assumptions. Offa, king of the Mercians, won an arduous way to superiority over every domestic impediment and neighbouring power<sup>2</sup>, through a remorseless career of sanguinary wars and crimes. Among his victims was the king of Kent, who perished in battle

---

<sup>1</sup> "Latin was not, in those days, used in all public transactions."— in the same degree as at present, LORENZ. 24.
 a dead language; it was still <sup>2</sup> "Offa, having expelled Beorn-spoken in several parts of the raed, succeeded by general con-Frank kingdom, and constantly sent of the kingdom, A.D. 757."

amidst a frightful carnage<sup>1</sup>. This decisive victory did not satisfy Offa: his vindictive spirit now fastened upon Lambert, archbishop of Canterbury. That prelate had sought assistance from abroad, while his unfortunate sovereign was preparing for the fatal conflict<sup>2</sup>; and must feel the bitterness of a conqueror's resentment. Mercia was to be torn from his jurisdiction, by the establishment of an archbishopric at Lichfield. But such arrangements often baffle very powerful princes. Hence Offa turned his eyes to Italy, shrewdly calculating that recognition there would prove effective nearer home. Being duly mindful to give his application pecuniary weight<sup>3</sup>, he thus established a precedent for stamping that mercenary character upon Rome, which Englishmen reprobated as her conspicuous infamy, even under the blindest period of their subserviency<sup>4</sup>. The recognition sought in a manner so discerning was not refused, a pall soon testifying papal approbation of Offa's wish to seat a metropolitan at Lichfield<sup>5</sup>.

Hardy's note to Malmesbury. i. 118.

<sup>1</sup> Vita Offæ Secundi. MATT. PARIS. Ed. Watts. Lond. 1639, p. 16.

<sup>2</sup> "Ante contracta fœdera, promiserat idem Lambertus Karolo, quod si hostiliter ingressurus Britanniam adveniret, liberum in archiepiscopatum suum introitum inveniret, favorem et adiutorium." — Ib. 21.

<sup>3</sup> "Misit igitur ad Papam Adrianum hinc præsentem, cui rex Offa, fuerat propter suam supereminentem sanctitatem amicissimus, nuncios discretos et facundos, honore atque favore condignos, insuper donativis c. nfe-

rendis præmunitos. Noverat enim Rex desideria Romanorum." (Ib.)

"Simul regnum Merciorum archiepiscopatu insignire affectans, epistolis ad Adrianum Papam, et fortassis muneribus egit, ut pallio Licetfeldensem episcopum, contra morem veterum efferret." — MALMESB. de Gest. PP. Script. post Bedam, f. 113.

<sup>4</sup> "Datâ pecuniâ infinitâ, a sede Apostolicâ, quæ nulli deest pecuniam largienti, licentiam impetravit." (MATT. PAR. Hist. Angl. p. 155.) "Ut quid ad nos se extendit Romanorum insatiata cupiditas?" (Ib. 278.) Matthew Paris affords many similar passages.

<sup>5</sup> "Rex vester præcellentissi-

From the vengeance of this imperious Mercian arose another injurious innovation upon English polity. Since the days of Augustine, no agent bearing a papal commission had ever set his foot on British ground<sup>1</sup>; but under a recent exigency, domestic approbation had been sought through Roman influence. Two legates soon appeared to improve the opening thus afforded by a selfish and short-sighted policy. Whether these Italians, Gregory, bishop of Ostia, and Theophylact, bishop of Todi, were invited expressly by Offa, is not known; he received them, however, most courteously<sup>2</sup>, and they travelled over England as accredited agents of the papal see. Their mission led to a solemn ratification of the Mercian ecclesiastical arrangements. A council was holden at Calcuith<sup>3</sup>, in the presence of these foreigners, and Lambert was driven there to acquiesce under the mutilation of his archiepiscopal dignity<sup>4</sup>, Lichfield being placed over all the Mercian suffragans of Canterbury<sup>5</sup>. The legates mus Offa, suis literis testatus est, ut in id omnium vestrum una voluntas et unanima esset petitio, vel propter vastitatem terrarum vestrarum, et extensionem regni vestri, nec non et aliis quam plurimis causis et utilitatibus. Pro his præcipuè causis honorem Pallii Merciorum episcopo Dominus Adrianus Apostolicus direxit."—Epist. Leonis III. Papæ ad Kenulphum Regem. Angl. Sacr. i. 460.

<sup>1</sup> Proœmium ad Adrianum Papam I. Conc. Calchuth. SPELM. i. 293. WILK. i. 146.

<sup>2</sup> "Cum ingenti gaudio suscepit."—Ib. 292.

<sup>3</sup> "Challock, or Chalk, in Kent."—DR. INGRAM'S Index to the Sax. Chr. The Saxon Chronicle writes

this place Cælchythe, and places the council in 785. There is, however, some difference of opinion both as to place and date. Spelman's date is 787.

<sup>4</sup> "Jambertus in synodo litigiosâ quæ apud Chealchite celebrata est, non modicam suæ parochiæ perdidit portionem."—GERVAS Act. PP. Cantuar. X. Script. col. 1641.

<sup>5</sup> "Quorum hæc fuerunt nomina, Denebertus, Wigornensis episcopus, Werenbertus, Legecestrensis episcopus, Edulphus, Sidnaces-trensis, Wlpheardus, Herefordensis; et episcopi Orientalium Anglorum, Alheardus, Elmanensis, Tidfrid, Dommucensis."—(MALMESB. de Gest. RR. Script. post Bedam, f. 15.) After Offa's

also produced a body of canons, to which the council gave assent. It thus yielded a solemn affirmation to the faith professed in the first six general councils, condemned various heathen practices, and regulated several points of ecclesiastical discipline. From one of these canons it appears, that although tythes were customarily paid, yet such payment was popularly considered a discharge from alms-giving. The legates reprobate this view, enjoining men to surrender not only God's tenth, but also to seek his blessing by charitable gifts out of the nine portions remaining for themselves<sup>1</sup>.

When Offa felt his agitated and guilty life wearing fast away, he became, as is common with such men, a superstitious devotee. Some remains of mortality, discovered miraculously, men were told, at Verulam<sup>2</sup>, were pronounced relics of Alban, the British proto-martyr, and a splendid abbey was founded to receive them. Not contented with this royal display of penitence, Offa visited Rome, a suitor for papal approbation upon his extraordinary munificence. Being fully gratified, he settled upon the English college at Rome a penny from every family, not absolutely destitute, within his dominions, excepting tenants under his abbey of St. Albans<sup>3</sup>. From this donation arose the payment of Rome-scot, or the Rome-penny, afterwards called Peter-pence, which death, Canterbury recovered her ancient jurisdiction, Lichfield having been complimented by no more than a single pall. Her archiepiscopal honours ended about the year 800. (WHARTON. Angl. Sacr. i. 430.) See also Bampton Lectures, p. 175.

<sup>1</sup> Conc. Calc. can. 17. SPELM. i. 298. WILK. i. 150.

<sup>2</sup> MATT. PAR. Vita Offæ II. p. 26.

<sup>3</sup> Id. 29. Offa has been said to have followed here the liberality of Ina, who is the reported grantor of the same contribution from Wessex; but there is no sufficient authority for Ina's grant. —INNETT. i. 220.

continued to be remitted, with occasional interruptions, to the papal treasury, until the Reformation.

But although in Offa's days the national dignity was first impaired by a request of papal recognition for English acts, yet his reign exhibited Italian influence under a most signal and mortifying defeat. A policy deep, indeed, but fatal and infamous, was paganizing the Church of Rome. She had gloriously ridden superior to all the storms of Oriental heresy; but seduction from the East had been found irresistible, when inviting to defile her purity by a base alliance with Gentile superstition. This glaring departure from Scriptural authority, drew such reproaches from Israelitish and Mahometan revilers, as galled severely, because their seasoning was unpalatable truth. Stung by this just pungency of rebuke, the imperial court of Constantinople ordered images to be removed from churches. It was a wise provision against a temptation found an overmatch for unwary Christians; but it was unworthily requited by the loss of Italy. The Roman bishop, pandering to their inveterate affection for heathen vanities, encouraged his flock in raising the standard of rebellion. Thus he sowed the seeds that eventually ripened in the sovereignty of his see<sup>1</sup>. This dexterous patronage of a fascinating worship was confirmed at Nice, under an artful empress, with a minor son, by synodical authority. Pope Adrian now fain would have won western acquiescence in Italian degeneracy, by transmitting the decrees of this popular synod to Charlemain. The Frankish conqueror communicated them to Offa, by whom they were laid before the Anglo-Saxon clergy: that body pondered them with strong surprise and rising indignation. It is true that England had long sought pleasure and improvement from intercourse with Rome: looked also upon the papacy with filial deference; nor was she any stranger to imitative arts in ornamenting churches. No habit or authority was however powerful enough to make her give a sacred character to any of those heathen superstitions that she saw with pain yet clinging tenaciously to her ignorant population. The papal court was now therefore placed under cover of a ceremonious reserve: English ecclesiastics affected to overlook its connexion with the second Council of Nice; and treating this assembly as merely oriental, made no scruple of pronouncing its decrees a grievous disgrace to Christianity, the worship of images being that which God's church altogether execrates. This language being sure to sound in Roman ears very much like an ironical attack, and involving really an open defiance of papal authority, the Anglo-Saxon divines anxiously desired some powerful pen to repress the inevitable displeasure of their Italian friends. Alcuin, the most illustrious of contemporary scholars, undertook this delicate task, and his execution of it excited unqualified admiration<sup>1</sup>. The work produced by him has not been

---

<sup>1</sup> "Tum vero Leo tertius imperator, cum apertè invehi in pontificem (GREG. II.) non posset, edictum proponit, ut omnes qui sub imperio Romano essent, sanctorum omnium, martyrum, et angelorum statuas atque imagines e templis abraderent, et auferrent tollendæ, ut ipse dicebat, idololatriæ causâ: qui vero secus fecisset, eum se pro hoste publico habiturum. Gregorius autem tantæ impietati non modo non obtemperat, verum etiam omnes catholicos admonet ne in tantum errorem timore vel edicto principis ullo modo dilabantur. Quâ cohortatione adeo certè animati sunt Italiæ populi, ut paulum abfuerit, quin sibi alium imperatorem deligerent. Quo minus autem id fieret, autoritate suâ obstare Gregorius annixus est. Ravennæ tamen tanta seditio orto est, cum alii imperatori, alii pontifici obtemperandum dicerent, ut in ipso tumultu

---

Paulus hexarchus cum filio occideretur."—PLATINA de Vit. PP.87.

<sup>1</sup> For authorities, see Bampton Lectures, p. 170. The evidence preserved with his venerated name, but it can hardly be any other than the celebrated Caroline Books<sup>1</sup>. These were prepared as an authentic declaration of Charle-main's opinions and policy upon the worship of images, and lovers of sound religion must rank them among the most valuable monuments that time has spared.

All worship of images is represented in these important books as an insidious relic of paganism<sup>2</sup>, identical even in origin, heathen images at first being merely commemorative, but eventually adored by popular superstition<sup>3</sup>. Iconolatriy among Christians is accordingly treated as a Satanic<sup>4</sup> device, by which triumphs gained of England's rejection of the deuterio-Nicene decrees is so decisive, and confirmed so completely by the Caroline Books, that it is needless to examine some tales, once current, about Egwin, bishop of Worcester, and a council, said to have been holden in London early in the eighth century, for the establishment of image-worship. Particulars may be seen in INETT. i. p. 145.

<sup>1</sup> "In this work, abounding in quotations, both from the fathers and classical authors, we discern no symptom of a paucity of books, the want of which Alcuin, some years later, felt so much in France; which also furnishes a proof that the greater part of it was written in England."—LORENZ. 119.

"The scarcity of the two first editions proves how eagerly and successfully the Catholics sought to suppress them. Fortunately the Protestants took under their protection a treatise exposed to such danger, and thus rescued it from the annihilation which threatened it."—Id. 118.

<sup>2</sup> "Imaginum usus, qui a gentili-lium traditionibus inolevit."—Opus. Illustriss. Car. Mag. 1549, p. 253.

<sup>3</sup> "Simulacrorum itaque usus exortus est, cum ex desiderio mortuorum quorumlibet virorum fortium, aut regum, aut quarundam urbium conditorum, aut quarumlibet artium inventorum imagines vel effigies ab his qui eos dilexerant conderenter, ut posteriorum vel dilectorum dolor haberet aliquod de imaginum contemplatione remedium: sed paulatim hunc errorem persuadentibus dæmonibus ita in posteris inrepressisse, ut quos illi pro solâ nominis memoriâ pingendos censuerant, successores deos existimarent atque colerent, et in his sibi dæmones sacrificare inlectos quosq.; miseros percenserent."—Ib. 581.

<sup>4</sup> "Omnium malorum suasor, et e contrario omnium bonorum dissuasor, idcirco homines persuasit creaturas colere, ut eos a Creatore averteret."—Ib. 392.

in open field are likely to be lost within the city walls<sup>1</sup>. It is also directly charged with novelty<sup>2</sup>, and attempts to shelter it under Mosaical commands, for sculptured cherubim and the brazen serpent, are indignantly exposed<sup>3</sup>: nor are various nice distinctions overlooked, by which discerning advocates fain would obviate objections<sup>4</sup>. No use indeed whatever is conceded to images, or pictures, in religious worship, beyond mere ornament and commemoration: hence the lighting of tapers, or the burning of incense before them, honours paid to them by a kiss, or a salutation of any kind, are all condemned as unauthorized and superstitious<sup>5</sup>: their utility, however, as

<sup>1</sup> "Sollicitè ergo præcavendum est, et summâ industriâ procurandum, ne dum quidam nostrorum quasdam res ultra quam ordo exposcit sublimare adfectant, vetustissimi illius et cariosi erroris redivivi illis cineres convalescant, et victoriam quam in campo adepti sunt, intra urbis mœnia perdant." — Opus. Illustriss. Car. Mag. 1549, p. 583.

<sup>2</sup> "Majores eorum qui eas non adoravêre." — (Ib. 277.) "Quæ non ad adorandum ab antiquis positæ fuerant." — Ib. 610.

<sup>3</sup> "Quantum ita sint absurditatis, quantæque dementiæ illi qui his sacratissimis, et summo honore dignis rebus, præcipiente Domino, a legislatore conditis, imagines æquiparare conantes, illarum adorationem his exemplis stabilire moliantur, nec ferrea vox explicare, nec nostri sensus existimatio poterit indagare." — (Ib. 91.)

"Nam dum æneus serpens, præcipiente Domino, a Moyse conditus, et in sublimi fuerit, non ut adoraretur positus, sed ut ad

tempus ignitorum serpentium virosis obsisteret morsibus, falsè spei ludificatione deluduntur, qui ita se manufactarum imaginum inspectione sanandos arbitrantur." — Ib. 114.

<sup>4</sup> "Non sunt imagines cruci æquiparandæ, non adorandæ, non colendæ." — (Ib. 248.) "Isti autem quasdam res insensatas adorandas, sive colendas esse absurdissimâ deliberatione percenseant." — (Ib. 360.) "Aliud namque est hominem salutationis officio, et humanitatis obsequio adorando salutare, aliud picturam diversorum colorum fucis compaginatam, sine gressu, sine voce, vel cæteris sensibus, nescio quo culta adorare." — (Ib. 67.) "Nec tenuiter quidem adorare." — Ib. 68.

<sup>5</sup> "Hæc præterea et hujusmodi superstitiones quas se quidam putant ob amorem Dei facere; sicut hi qui ob sanctorum amorem imaginibus luminaria accendunt." — (Ib. 117.) "Nunc mentis oculo sollicite intuendum est, quantum, in supra memoratarum imaginum monuments and decorations, is fully admitted. Former imperial orders to remove and destroy them are accordingly pointedly reprobated.

But although the Caroline Books, in their general tenor, are highly favourable to Protestant views of theology, Romanists may gather from them several useful testimonies. Their author's evident anxiety to spare the feelings of his Roman friends, keeps him studiously from collision with any but Oriental names. Allusion to the papal see is very rare, but always, when occurring, profoundly respectful<sup>1</sup>. To relics, and apparently to the cross, outward acts of veneration are allowed, under alleged sanction from antiquity<sup>2</sup>; this concession, howabolitione vel veneratione, filium error à parentum errore dissentiat. Illi eas mancipavêre crepitantibus ignibus: isti honorant odoriferis thymiamatibus."—(Ib. 281.) "Osculator et adoro imagines. O mira confessio episcopi!"—(Ib. 329.) "Imagines, quæ rationis expertes sunt, nec salutatione nec adoratione dignæ."—(Ib. 228.) These passages are inconsistent with Dr. Lingard's representation, an echo of Baronius (Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church. Fr. Transl. p. 351), that the execration of England on receiving the deuteronicene decrees arose from the mistranslation of a sentence uttered by Constantine, bishop of Cyprus, which makes him say that he adored images as he did the Trinity. That he was so understood in the West is evident from the Caroline Books (p. 382); and, most probably, this exaggerated view of his meaning tended to increase the execration so embarrassing to well-informed Romanists. But it is evident, sufficiently from our ancient chroniclers, and abundantly from the Caroline Books, that no single sentiment aroused Anglo-Saxon abhorrence. The truth is, that in Britain, Gaul, and Germany, pictures and images were then looked upon merely as church-furniture; hence no more fit for religious notice of any kind than a bench or a door.—See COLLIER. Eccl. Hist. i. 141.

<sup>1</sup> "Sancta Romana Ecclesia cæteris Ecclesiis à Domino præ-lata." (Opus. Illustriss. Car. Mag. 50.) "Sicut igitur cæteris discipulis apostoli, et apostolis omnibus Petrus eminent: ita nimirum cæteris sedibus apostolicæ, et apostolicis Romana eminere dinoscitur."—Ib. 51.

<sup>2</sup> "Honor itaque dignè sanctorum corporibus, reliquiis sive basilicis, exhibetur, et omnipotenti Deo et sanctis ejus manet acceptus."—(Ib. 378.) "Restat ut nos sanctos in eorum corporibus, vel potius reliquiis corporum, seu ever, is inconsistent with principles advanced elsewhere, forbidding all adoration of senseless things'. Prayers, masses, and alms-giving for the dead, are also maintained; and the intercession of saints is represented as important<sup>2</sup>. Still, it does not appear that the author thought omniscience to reside anywhere but in the God-head: he renders, therefore, very slender service to the principle of invoking departed spirits. His work, indeed, is chiefly valuable as a decisive testimony upon one important question, as a record of contemporary theological principles, and as an evidence that the passage was very gradual from primitive simplicity to a religion extensively destitute of Scriptural authentication.

Another interesting monument of contemporary theological principles, is the Penitential of Egbert. From this work plainly appears, what is also evident from a canon enacted at Cloveshoo, that penances were merely regarded as compensatory medicines for sins<sup>3</sup>.

etiam vestimentis veneremur, juxta antiquorum patrum traditionem."—(Ib. 381.) From the whole of the twenty-seventh chapter in the second book, it seems reasonable to infer, that in the author's time some sort of outward veneration was paid to the cross, and that he approved it. He does not, however, expressly say so, nor from his rhetoric and mysticism can it be affirmed certainly that he meant so.

<sup>1</sup> "Res insensatas contra divinarum scripturarum instituta adorare."—Ib. 340.

<sup>2</sup> "Saluberrimus namque à sanctis patribus Ecclesiis traditus usus est pro defunctorum spiritibus Dominum deprecari."—(Ib.

278.) "Nos nostris quietem exposcimus per missarum solennia. Nos nostris secundum ecclesiasticum usum per orationum et elemosynarum instantiam deposcimus veniam."—(Ib. 279.) "Revertantur ad Dominum, et per sanctorum intercessionem ab eo sanitatem se accepturos credant."—Ib. 117.

<sup>3</sup> "How can he preach sound faith, or give a knowledge of the word, or discreetly enjoin penance to others, who has not earnestly bent his mind to these studies? Here you see for what purpose men in this age confessed their sins to the priest, viz. because he alone knew what penance was to be enjoined for every sort and degree of sin, not in order to

Hence, from ecclesiastics was expected an accurate acquaintance with all the niceties of penitential discipline, as an indispensable professional qualification. Egbert's provision for supplying his illiterate clergy with this information, prescribes penitential medicine for many cases most grossly obscene. Such loathsome pictures reveal a depraved, brutish age; and they could hardly fall under clerical scrutiny without communicating or confirming a taint of impurity. This compilation also reminds us of barbarous times, in the insecurity of life and liability to personal outrage which it strikingly displays: it is however plain, that ecclesiastical authorities were anxious to stem this torrent of violence. The Penitential provides penance even for justifiable homicide<sup>1</sup>, and for false oaths ignorantly taken<sup>2</sup>; but the murder of a priest or monk is more severely visited than that of another man<sup>3</sup>. Such a protection for the clerical order was not perhaps unfair, when its members were the only persons of superior condition likely to be found unarmed. Upon the whole, this system of clerical police is but imperfectly calculated for benefiting public morals, because opportunities are afforded for mitigating the rigour of fasting by psalm-singing and alms-giving<sup>4</sup>. This latter substitute was obtain absolution. Petit's Collections, published with Theodore's Penitential, are full of proof as to this point.—JOHNSON'S Collection. Canons at Cloveshoo, 747.

<sup>1</sup> "If a man slay another in a public fight, or from necessity, where he is defending his lord's property, let him fast forty nights."—JOHNSON'S Collection, b. i. can. 24. WILKINS, i. 120.—Author's MS. Transl.

<sup>2</sup> "He who is led on to an oath, and knows nothing therein but right, and he so swears with the other men, and afterwards knows that it was false, let him fast three lawful fasts."—Ib. can. 34. WILK. i. 122.

<sup>3</sup> "Whatever man slays a priest or a monk, that is the bishop's decision, whether he give up weapons and go into a monastery, or he fast seven winters."—Ib. can. 23. WILK. i. 120.

<sup>4</sup> "A man should do penance

naturally very acceptable to wealthy sinners, and such, accordingly, seem even to have given alms in advance, as it were, of some projected iniquity<sup>1</sup>.

Of religious peculiarities incidentally discovered in Egbert's Penitential, no one is more striking than Anglo-Saxon reception of that compromise with Jewish prejudices which apostolical authority established early in the Christian era. Our forefathers were enjoined a rigorous abstinence from blood, and from things strangled<sup>2</sup>: nor did they disregard Levitical distinctions between the clean and unclean among animals<sup>3</sup>. They seem to have been for capital sins a year or two on bread and water; and for less sins a week or a month. But this is with some men a very difficult thing and painful; wherefore we will teach with what things he may redeem it who cannot keep this fast: that is, he shall with psalm-singing and with alms-deeds, make satisfaction a very long space.—Ib. can. 2. WILK. i. 115.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Let not alms be given according to the new-invented conceit of men's own will, grown into a custom, dangerous to many, for the making an abatement or commutation of the satisfactory fastings and other expiatory works enjoined to a man by a priest of God. Monsieur Petit observes, that this canon does not condemn the practice of giving alms by way of penance, with a purpose of leaving sin, but giving them in hopes to purchase license to sin."—JOHNSON, ut supra.

<sup>2</sup> Acts xv. 29. This text is cited in the thirty-eighth canon as a reason for the remarkable prohibitions occurring in that canon, and in some of those connected with it. In these, fish is allowed to be eaten, though met-with dead, as being different from land animals. Honey might not be eaten if the bees killed in it remained a whole night. Fowls, and other animals suffocated in nets, were not to be eaten, even although a hawk should have bitten them. Domestic poultry that had drunk up human blood were not to be eaten until after an interval of three months. A man knowingly eating blood in his food was to fast seven days; any one doing this ignorantly was to fast three days, or sing the Psalter. Such provisions naturally made scrupulous persons uneasy whenever they swallowed blood accidentally. Hence an assurance is given that swallowing one's own blood in spittle incurs no danger.—Can. 40. WILK. i. 124.

<sup>3</sup> Especially the weasel and the mouse were considered unclean. A layman giving to another even water in which one of these animals had been drowned was to fast three nights; a minster-man was taught, however, nothing decisive in Egbert's time, upon the value to departed souls of services intended for their benefit by survivors; it is expressly said, that fasting for such purposes is of uncertain efficacy<sup>1</sup>: a declaration rendering it probable, that masses and almsgiving for the dead also occasioned hesitating speculation. It is plain, likewise, that modern Romish purgatorial doctrines were then only in their infancy at furthest. Men are enjoined to confession and penance, lest they should be consigned hereafter to eternal torments<sup>2</sup>. A divine would hardly have used such language who believed in the sufficiency of confession alone upon earth, and the safety of deferring satisfaction for purgatory.

to sing three hundred psalms. A large quantity of water in which one of these animals had been drowned was not to be used until sprinkled with holy water. Hare, however, it is expressly said, might be eaten (can. 38); and so, plainly, might swine's flesh (can. 40); yet, it might seem from can. 39, the pig was thought to labour under some sort of uncleanness. (WILK. 123, 124. Levit. xi. 29.) These prejudices have an Oriental air, and make one think of Theodore. "The ancient Russians, like the present Raskolniks, or Dissenters, abstained from veal, hare, doves, crayfish, and also from every animal which had died in the blood. They also accounted those unclean which were killed by females." (PINKERTON'S Russia. Lond. 1833, p. 71.) In Abyssinia, snipes, geese, ducks, with all other water-fowl, as also hares and swine, are considered impure. Some of them it is thought a sin to handle, especially the hare, and when this happens, the party washes thoroughly, or seeks absolution from a priest.—Life of Nathaniel Pearce. Lond. 1831, ii. 26, 27.

<sup>1</sup> "He who fasteth for a dead man, it is a consolation to himself, if it helpeth not the dead. God alone wol if his dead are benefited." —JOHNSON'S Collection, can. 41. WILK. i. 124.

<sup>2</sup> "It is better to all men that they amend (bete) their sins here than that they should continue in eternal torments."—B. ii. can. 5. WILK. i. 126.

CHAPTER III.

FROM ALCUIN TO DUNSTAN.

804—928.

DARKNESS OF THE AGE SUCCEEDING ALCUIN—COUNCIL OF CELYCHRYTH—INCIDENTAL EVIDENCE AGAINST TRANSUBSTANTIATION—SECULAR MONASTERIES—NOTICE OF THE ANCIENT BRITISH CHURCH—ETHELWULF—HIS DECIMATION—HIS LIBERALITY TO ROME—ALFRED'S VISITS TO ROME—HIS EARLY IGNORANCE OF LETTERS—HIS ACCESSION TO THE THRONE—HIS CONCEALMENT IN THE ISLE OF ATHELNEY—HIS VICTORY OVER THE DANES—HIS LITERARY WORKS—HIS PHYSICAL INFIRMITIES—HIS ECONOMY OF TIME AND OF MONEY—HIS ECCLESIASTICAL LAWS—HIS TRUNCATED DECALOGUE—HIS RELIGIOUS BELIEF—ERIGENA—ALLEGED PAPAL EXCOMMUNICATION UNDER EDWARD THE ELDER—ATHELSTAN—COUNCIL OF GRATELEY—DOCTRINES.

THE era between Theodore and Alcuin was that of Anglo-Saxon intellectual eminence. Modern times, drawing invidious comparisons, may charge it with ignorance and barbarism: it justly held a very different estimation among contemporaries. The successive appearances of Aldhelm, Bede, Egbert, and Alcuin, bore ample testimony to admiring Europe, that the able monk of Tarsus, and Adrian, his no less gifted friend, had requited nobly their adopted country. The literary fame of ancient England reached its height when Charlemain listened eagerly to Alcuin; and some of the church's brightest luminaries proudly owned him for a master<sup>1</sup>. He proved, however, the immediate precursor to a dark and stormy night of ignorance. His native country soon reached, indeed, a political maturity that he had never witnessed. No longer did unceasing struggles for ascendancy, among several petty princes, find only an occasional respite in the general acknowledgment of a Bretwalda. The eighth and last bearer of that title<sup>1</sup>, Egbert, king of Wessex, rendered its prerogatives hereditary in his family, thus laying the foundations of a national monarchy. But England had already smarted under a ruinous counterpoise to any domestic advantage. Anglo-Saxon cruelty and injustice to the British race were frightfully retaliated by hordes of pirates, issuing from their own ancestral home. A succession of Danish marauders, fired with hope of abundant booty, condemned several generations to a constant sense of insecurity, and the frequent endurance of bitterest suffering. In a country so harassed, every peaceful art necessarily languished, especially literature; both fanaticism and cupidity directing the ferocious Northmen to monasteries, where alone books were stored, and scholars found a home<sup>2</sup>.

---

<sup>1</sup> See Bampton Lectures, 375, 377.

A period of such absorbing public uneasiness can afford but few materials for ecclesiastical history, though it is obviously favourable to the stealthy progress of religious corruptions. Earlier years of the ninth century are naturally identified in principles with a happier age. A council holden at Celychyth, in 816, under <sup>1</sup> Sax. Chr. 88. Egbert's pre-eminence is there assigned to the year 827, when, by the conquest of Mercia, he became sovereign, or chief of all England, south of the Humber.

<sup>2</sup> "The cruelties exercised by Charlemain against the Pagan Saxons in Nordalbingia had aroused the resentment of their neighbours, and fellow-worshippers of Odin, in Jutland, and the isles of the Danish archipelago. Their wild spirit of adventure, and lust of plunder, were now wrought up to a pitch of frenzy by religious fanaticism. Hence the ravages of the Northmen were directed with peculiar fury against the monasteries and churches in France and England, and against the priests of a religion rendered doubly hateful to them in consequence of the attempts made by the successors of Charlemain in the empire to force it upon them as a badge of national slavery." — WHEATON'S History of the Northmen. Lond. 1831, p. 146.

Wulfred, archbishop of Canterbury, in presence of Kenulf, king of Mercia, and his more distinguished laity, makes, however, a slight advance towards Roman innovation. It enjoins, on the consecration of a church, that the saint in whose honour it was built should be commemorated on its walls<sup>1</sup>: but the canon is worded so obscurely as to render it uncertain whether a picture or an inscription was intended; probably the question was designedly left open for individual discretion. Even, however, if a picture were exclusively the object, it is enjoined in a spirit very different from that grovelling superstition and arrogant intolerance which Nice lately saw displayed upon such questions<sup>2</sup>. Deposition had been also there awarded against any bishop who should consecrate a church without relics<sup>3</sup>. In case, however, these could not readily be gotten, the council of Celychyth expressly sanctioned such a consecration. Under this deficiency, prelates were to deposit the sacramental elements alone in a coffer, ordinarily containing both them and relics<sup>4</sup>.

Attention has been drawn to this permission, as an incidental testimony against transubstantiation, the great distinctive doctrine of modern Romanism<sup>5</sup>: nor, indeed,

<sup>1</sup> "Seu etiam præcipimus unicuique episcopo, ut habeat depictum in pariete oratorii, aut in tabula, vel etiam in altaribus, quibus sanctis sint utraque dedicata." (Syn. Celych. cap. 2. SPELM. i. 328. WILK. i. 169.) Johnson thus renders this clause: "And we charge every bishop, that he have it written on the walls of the oratory, or in a table, or also on the altars, to what 'saints both of them are dedicated."

<sup>2</sup> "Ei, qui non salutatur sanctas imagines, anathema."—Conc. Ni-

cæn. II. Actio 8. LABB. et COSS. vii. 591.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. can. vii. col. 603.

<sup>4</sup> "Postea eucharistia, quæ ab episcopo per idem ministerium consecratur, cum aliis reliquiis, condatur in capsulâ, ac servetur in eadem basilica. Et si alias reliquias intimare non potest, tam hoc maximè proficere potest."—SPELM. WILK. ul supra.

<sup>5</sup> "Much less would they have spoken of the holy elements as an inferior sort of relics, and have given them place accordingly, if can discerning believers in that principle fail of regretting at the very least, that an assumed incarnation of the Deity should be denied even a level with relics of the saintly dead. In this canon, however, as in many other ancient authorities alleged against the corporal presence, expressions are employed which qualify the dissatisfaction of Romish minds. The consecrated elements are allowed to be sufficient of themselves, because they are the body and blood of Christ. For speaking thus, the synod of Celychyth undoubtedly could plead antiquity. The reason why such precedents abound in early monuments of theology may readily be conjectured: primitive worshippers received the eucharist constantly, even daily. Scoffing and thoughtless observers must have often represented this as a superstitious habit, adopted by a peculiar society, of taking mere bread and wine together. Now, no considerable number of preachers and writers ever seek to correct a prevailing error, without supplying many rhetorical expressions, obviously favourable to misinterpretation in a subsequent age: such a fate has naturally attended speculations upon the holy supper. Believers in transubstantiation would fain establish its title to implicit faith upon many passages of the Fathers, and of other ancient ecclesiastical remains: those who deny that doctrine entrench themselves behind plain declarations, the general tenor, and the expressive silence of the very same monuments. The last proof is little needed by Protestant controversialists, when appealing to Anglo-Saxon evidence. The great eucharistic pecu-

---

they had believed that the elements which they appointed to be deposited in a chest among their relics was the same body that was glorified in heaven.”—(INETT. Hist. Eng. | Ch. i. 256.) “Here the eucharistical symbols are set on a level with the relics of saints, and scarce that neither.”—JOHNSON, in loc.

liarity of modern Rome attracted general attention in ante-Norman times; hence the religious luminaries of ancient England were called eventually to speak decisive language upon this interesting question, and their voice has inflicted a vital injury upon belief in the corporal presence. Whenever their testimony, therefore, has an aspect, as at Celychyth, of some ambiguity, it may be fairly cited, notwithstanding, to disprove the eucharistic opinions now maintained by Rome.

Another canon<sup>1</sup> brings under observation a point in theological antiquities, little generally understood. Monachism has been for ages an immense organized association, marshalling and controlling certain orders of ecclesiastics and female recluses: it is natural to regard it under the same aspect from the first. Such a view is, however, inaccurate. Many of the earlier monks and nuns were merely the stricter sort of religious professors, identical, substantially, with similar devotees variously designated in Christian records. For the reception of such ascetics opulent individuals often opened their houses, assuming themselves the character of abbot or abbess. These lay or secular monasteries<sup>2</sup> naturally offered considerable impediments to the exercise of ecclesiastical authority; they were, besides, loudly taxed with immorality. Another objection to them were the claims of their superiors to immunities conferred ordinarily upon wise reformed according to the model of Christianity, by reason of the violence of tyrannical covetousness,) which are, we know not how, possessed by secular men, not by divine law, but by presumptuous human invention." — Conc. Cloves. can. 5. SPELM. i. 247. WILK. i. 95.

<sup>1</sup> Syn. ap. Celych. can. 8. SPELM. i. 329. WILK. i. 170.

<sup>2</sup> These monasteries are thus mentioned (JOHNSON'S Transl.) by the council of Cloveshoo, A.D. 747: "It is necessary for bishops to go to the monasteries (if they can be called monasteries, which in these times cannot be in any

monastic foundations. Their enemies, accordingly, represented them as little better than receptacles of hypocritical profligacy, established by crafty proprietors, to escape from the liabilities of other men. Severe as were these representations, and no doubt often unjust, sufficient truth was in them to bring discredit on the system: hence public opinion powerfully seconded arguments upon the necessity of suppressing religious establishments in private houses: monks and nuns, it was extensively admitted, ought hereafter to reside only in abodes inalienably devoted to them by fixed endowments, and regularly under ecclesiastical discipline. The synod of Celychyth provided for these objects, and thus laid the foundation of that discord upon monastic questions which long agitated England. Among great numbers of ostentatious professors, charges of sanctimonious licentiousness could always be successfully retorted; advocates for secular monasteries might also plausibly designate objections urged by their opponents as a mere veil for priestly ambition. Thus, when Italian monachism sought public favour, at a later period, it was encountered by inveterate habits of commenting invidiously on monastic pretensions<sup>1</sup>.

It may be collected also from one of these canons<sup>2</sup>,

<sup>1</sup> INETT. Hist. Engl. Ch. i. 261.

<sup>2</sup> "5. That none of Scottish extract (de genere Scottorum) be permitted to usurp to himself the sacred ministry in any one's diocese; nor let it be allowed to such an one to touch anything which belongs to those of the holy order, nor to receive anything from them in baptism, or in the celebration of the mass, or that they administer the eucharist to the people, because we are not certain how, or by whom, they were ordained. We know how 'tis enjoined in the canons, that no bishop or presbyter invade the parish (parochiam, i. e. diocese,) of another without the bishop's consent. So much the rather should we refuse to receive the sacred ministrations from other nations, where there is no such order as that of metropolitans, nor any regard paid to other that ancient Britain had not yet lost her influence upon the people indebted so largely to her Christian zeal. Europe is often loosely viewed as under papal vassalage, from her conversion to the Reformation. A closer inspection will find very early traces of the faithful, unconnected with Rome, in most western countries: in England, such professors are foremost among the national apostles. Nor, although depressed by a long course of unfavourable events, was the Romish party able to look upon them without jealousy, even after more than two centuries from Augustine's arrival. The synod of Celychyth, accordingly, strictly forbids any of the Scottish race to minister in England: uncertainty as to the ordination of such ministers is assigned as the reason for this prohibition, their native country being without metropolitans<sup>1</sup>. This objection would wear the semblance of a reasonable precaution, had any opening been left at Celychyth for verifying the ministerial character of divines from Scotland; but the prohibition is absolute, as if intended for crushing a rival party. Posterity may store it among evidences against Romish claims to antiquity and universality.

It was fortunate for the progress of papal ascendancy, that England had scarcely taken the form of a single state before her sceptre devolved upon a sovereign, called into active life from a cloister, and fitted only for one.

---

(orders)." — JOHNSON'S Transl. SPELM. i. 329. WILK. i. 170. The last clause is obscure, standing thus: Cum quibus nullus ordo metropolitanis, nec honor aliis habeatur. Johnson reads metropolitani, and supplies orders to explain the last word.

<sup>1</sup> "It is well known there was no metropolitan in Scotland till after the middle of the fifteenth century, when St. Andrew's was created into an archbishopric. Nay, their bishops had no distinct dioceses before the middle of the eleventh century." — JOHNSON, in loc.

Egbert's early prosperity was alloyed in his declining age by domestic disappointment: an elder son preceding him to the tomb<sup>1</sup>, and his later hopes were consequently centred in Ethelwulf, a young child. One of this prince's instructors was Swithin, bishop of Winchester<sup>2</sup>, whose name is yet familiar to English tongues, from its proverbial association with rainy summers<sup>3</sup>. By the generations immediately succeeding his own, Swithin's memory was profoundly venerated: sickly pilgrims crowding eagerly around his tomb, and implicitly relying on a cure. These posthumous honours evidence a high contemporary character; but admirers, even before the Norman conquest, vainly sought authentic particulars of Swithin's life<sup>4</sup>: he would not, however, have been sainted, <sup>1</sup> TURNER. Hist. Angl.-Sax. i. 486, note. On the authority of an ancient fragment preserved by Leland. Upon no other principle, indeed, is it easy to account for Ethelwulf's monastic education and habits.

<sup>2</sup> RUDBORNE. Hist. Maj. Wint. Angl. Sacr. i. 199.

<sup>3</sup> "According to the tradition, Swithin, bishop of Winchester, who died in 868, desired that he might be buried in the open church-yard, not in the chancel of the minster, as was usual with bishops, and his request was complied with; but the monks, on his being canonised, considering it to be disgraceful for the saint to lie in the public cemetery, resolved to remove his body into the choir, which was to be done with solemn procession on the 15th of July: it rained, however, so violently for forty days together, that the design was abandoned."—HAMP-

SON'S Medii Ævi Kalendarium. Lond. 1841, i. 321.

<sup>4</sup> We ne fundon on bocum hu se bisceop leofode on thysne worulde ær than the he gewende to Criste. (Hom. in S. Swith. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Julius, E. 7, f. 94). We have not found in books how the bishop lived in this world ere that he departed to Christ. This omission of Swithin's contemporaries as to his biography, is thus blamed as a mark of their carelessness. That was thæra gymeleast the on life hine cuthon, thæt hi noldon awritan his weorc and drohtnunge tham towerdum mannum the his mihte ne cuthon. It was their carelessness who knew him in life, that they would not write his works and conversation for future men who knew not his excellence. (Ib.) Again, Elfric ingenuously confesses that Swithin's known claims upon the veneration of posterity rested entirely upon without Roman and monastic tastes. Under such a tutor, Ethelwulf, whose habits apparently were peaceful and inactive, while his capacity was but moderate, could hardly fail of growing partial to monachism and the papacy. He seems, besides, not only to have become a monk, but also to have been ordained sub-deacon<sup>1</sup>: nay, he has been represented as actually appointed to the see of Winchester<sup>2</sup>. This, however, wants confirmation, though it is not unlikely that Egbert might have intended him for that bishopric during the lifetime of his elder brother. That young man's premature decease raised Ethelwulf to higher prospects, though, probably, far less congenial to his natural disposition. Instead of the cloister or the mitre, he was urgently taxed for superior qualities both as a statesman and a soldier.

In such endowments he discovered all the deficiency naturally to be expected from a peaceful spirit with an ecclesiastical education. Unhappily, this was more than ordinarily injurious to his native country. Nothing, however, could weaken the force of his religious impressions. An agitated reign, accordingly, made him anxious to secure the favour of heaven by conspicuous piety. The most remarkable instance of this anxiety has been attributed to the advice of St. Swithin, and has been his posthumous fame as a worker of miracles. Nu næs us his lif cuth swa swa we ær cwædon, butan that he wæs bebyrged æt his bisceop-stole, be wæstan thære cyrcan, and oferworht syththan, oth that his wundra geswutelodon his gesæltha mid Gode. (Ib. f. 95.) Now, his life is not known to us, even as we ere said, but that he was buried at his bishop's see, on the nest of the church, and over-wrought (enshrined) afterwards, when his wonders manifested his happiness with God.

---

<sup>1</sup> RUDBORNE, ut supra.

<sup>2</sup> Diceto speaks of Ethelwulf's episcopate as if he did not credit it. "Hic in juventute, sicut legitur, fuit episcopus Wintoniæ." (X. Script. 450.) Bromton speaks positively. "In primævâ ætate episcopus Wyntoniensis factus fuerat."—Ib. 802.

represented as the charter under which England became legally subject to tythes<sup>1</sup>. This interpretation, however, appearing hardly warranted by the document as now extant, has generally lost ground<sup>2</sup>. Ethelwulf seems,

<sup>1</sup> This view is, accordingly, adopted by Hume; and from the popularity of his history passes, probably, among the generality of readers, as indisputable. Had he found, however, in ecclesiastical questions, a call for thought and inquiry, instead of an irresistible temptation to scoff and sneer, it is likely that he would have entertained a different opinion of Ethelwulf's donation. Rudborne attributes this act of Ethelwulf to St. Swithin.—Hist. Maj. Winton. Angl. Sacr. i. 200.

<sup>2</sup> Ingulf of Croyland, William of Malmesbury, and Matthew of Westminster, have recorded this document; but their versions of it do not exactly agree. Their discrepancies are stated by Mr. Turner in a note.—(Hist. Angl.-Sax. i. 494.) The document, after reciting the miseries of Danish invasion, sets forth that the king, with a council of his bishops and chiefs, has granted "some hereditary portion of land to all degrees before possessing it, whether male or female servants of God, serving him, or poor laymen; always the tenth mansion: where that may be the least, then the tenth of all goods."—(TURNER'S Transl.) Aliquam portionem terrarum hæreditariam antea possidentibus omnibus gradibus, sive famulis et famulabus Dei, Deo servientibus, sive laicis miseris; semper decimam mansionem: ubi minimum sit, tum decimam par-

tem omnium bonorum.—(INGULF. Script. post Bedam, 491.) Mr. Turner well observes that "famulis et famulabus Dei, mean usually monks and nuns."

The recent historian of the Anglo-Saxon Commonwealth has thus treated this memorable grant:—"It has been considered as the legislative enactment by which the lands were first subjected to the payment of tythes to the clergy. But the right of the church had already been recognised in the most unequivocal manner; and the grants, many of which are extant, do not afford any voucher for the opinion which Selden erroneously entertained. The general statute expressly points out a decimation of the land by metes and bounds, to be held free from all secular services, exonerated from all tributes to the crown, and from the charges to which, of common right, all lands were subjected, namely, the fyrd, the brycg-bote, and the burh-bote: and this exemption was made to the end that the grantees might sedulously, and without intermission, offer up their prayers for the souls of Ethelwulf, and of those who had concurred in the donation: the land was, therefore, to be held in frank almoign. Proceeding upon his general enactment, Ethelwulf carried his intentions into effect by the specific endowments, which he conferred upon the various churches and their ministers, of indeed, merely to have obtained legislative authority for dedicating to religious uses, free from all secular burdens, a tenth of the royal domains'. He was then lands, which may be termed ecclesiastical benefices, rendering no service except at the altar. By some historians the grant has been construed into an enfranchisement of all the lands which the church then possessed; an interpretation not altogether void of probability; yet, if adopted, we must admit that the exoneration only affected the lands which the church possessed when the decree was made."—PALGRAVE. i. 159.

"A Frankish mansus was the allotment sufficient to maintain a family."—Ib. ii. 448.

The contemporary authority of Asser might lead us to consider, that Ethelwulf's grant was merely one of immunities, and was co-extensive with his dominions. "Venerabilis rex decimam totius regni sui partem ab omni regali servitio et tributo liberavit."—(De Reb. Gest. Alfred. Oxon. 1722, p. 8.) Ethelwerd, almost a contemporary, is more obscure. "In eodem anno decumavit Athulf rex de omni possessione suâ in partem Domini, et in universo regimine sui principatûs sic constituit."—(Script. post Bedam, 478.) The Saxon Chronicle (Dr. INGRAM'S Transl. 94) says, "King Ethelwulf registered (gebocude, booked,) a tenth of his land over all his kingdom, for the honour of God and for his own everlasting salvation." From this it seems reasonable to infer, that he formally surrendered, by means of regular written instruments, a tenth of all the crown lands for pious uses. Such an alienation was not valid without the consent of his witena-gemot, and, probably, the act, giving this consent, is the document found in states more or less complete by some of our ancient chroniclers, and yet preserved in their works.

<sup>1</sup> This is distinctly stated by an anonymous annalist of the church of Winchester, printed in the Monasticon (i. 32). "Rex Ethulfus, a Româ reversus, totam terram de dominio suo decimavit, et decimam quamq; hidam contulit conventualibus ecclesiis, per regionem." The following is Rudborne's view of this grant: "Ecclesias regni sui ab omni tributo regali liberavit. Decimam rerum suarum domino obtulit."—(Angl. Sacr. i. 202.) Ethelred says of Ethelwulf, "Elemosynis sanè sic operam dabat, ut totam terram suam pro Christo decimaret, et partem decimam per ecclesias monasteriaque divideret." (X. Script. 351.) These words might reasonably lead to a belief that Ethelwulf set apart a tenth of the crown lands as endowments for monasteries, and glebes for parochial churches. Bromton also represents Ethelwulf's donation as consisting in land, not in tythes of produce; but his words might be so taken as to give the grant an appearance strictly eleemosynary. "Iste Rex Ethelwolfus contulit Deo et ecclesiæ sanctæ decimam hidam terræ totius Westsaxiæ, ab omnibus serviciis secu-contemplating, probably, an extensive foundation of monasteries, and other pious establishments. Ecclesiastical rights to tythes of produce had been acknowledged as indefeasible long before his time.

The religious King of Wessex appears to have made his remarkable donation immediately before he undertook a journey to Rome<sup>1</sup>. During a year's residence in that celebrated city he displayed abundant liberality. The English school there, founded by Ina, had been destroyed by fire in the preceding year. Ethelwulf rebuilt it, and provided for its permanent utility, by renewing or confirming the grant of Peter-pence. The pope he gratified by splendid presents, and a pension of a hundred mancuses. He promised also two annual sums of the same amount, for supplying with lights the churches of St. Peter and St. Paul<sup>2</sup>. Among his own subjects, laribus liberam et quietam, ad pascendum et vestiendum pauperes debiles et infirmos."—X. Script.

802.

<sup>1</sup> Bromton (ut supra) places Ethelwulf's Roman journey after his decimation; as also do Asser, Ethelwerd, and the Saxon Chronicle. Ingulf, Huntingdon, and others, place the decimation after the journey to Rome. The year 854 is assigned to Ethelwulf's act by the Saxon Chronicle, the following year by Asser, and most probably by Ethelwerd; but that author's chronology is marginal. "Whereas our historians differ in their accounts, some saying that it was before his journey to Rome, others that it was after, I believe with Sir Henry Spelman, that this grant was made twice, once before he went to Rome, where it was confirmed by the pope, and again afterwards in a great council."

—HEARNE'S Ælfred. Oxf. 1709,
p. 21.

<sup>2</sup> ASSER. 13. MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 22. RUDBORNE. Angl. Sacr. i. 202. Both Malmesbury and Rudborne state Ethelwulf's benefactions in marks. Mancus, the term used by Asser, however, was the name ordinarily given among the Anglo-Saxons to their gold currency of less value than a pound. Mr. Turner (Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 495) coincides in an opinion of older writers, that the mancus, like the pound, was the name of no coin, but only of a certain quantity of uncoined metal. If it were otherwise, indeed, some Saxon gold coins could hardly fail of being yet found. The mancus was equal to thirty pennies, each worth a modern threepence; it amounted, therefore, to seven he provided effectually for lessening admiration of this munificence. On his way through France, he became enamoured of Judith, daughter to Charles the Bald; and people were disgusted when they saw their sovereign, who left them an elderly widower upon a pilgrimage, return home a bridegroom, with a young and handsome wife. Popular discontent was heightened by Ethelwulf's determination to have Judith crowned, and invested with all the honours of royalty. The Anglo-Saxons had long denied such privileges to the wives of their princes, and an intention to revive them came with a grace peculiarly ill from one who had abandoned a cloister for a throne<sup>1</sup>. The king's absence had given rise to a conspiracy; the uxorious weakness displayed on his return rendered it irresistible; and he was compelled to resign the chief of his dominions to Ethelbald, his eldest son. He survived this humiliating compromise only two years<sup>2</sup>.

Ethelwulf took with him to Rome his youngest and shillings and sixpence of our present money. (Notes to the Will of King Alfred. Lond. 1828, p. 31. De Nummis Saxonum Dissert. præf. Alfr. M. Vit. a D. JOH. SPELMAN. Oxon. 1678.) In a note to this latter work (p. 6), is a citation from the contemporary authority of Anastasius Bibliothecarius, detailing Ethelwulf's splendid presents on his visit to Rome.

<sup>1</sup> Asser says, that the West-Saxons had been used to deny the wives of their sovereigns a seat on the throne, or any other designation than that of the king's spouse. This usage, arising from the gross misconduct of a former queen, Ethelwulf appears to have been peremptory in breaking through, on his marriage with Judith, refusing to hear any expostulation to the contrary. (De Reb. Gest. Alfr. 10.) The coronation service used for Judith is still extant.—SPELM. Alfr. M. Vit. p. 8, note.

<sup>2</sup> ASSER. 8, 12. MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 22. The Saxon Chronicle says that Ethelwulf reigned eighteen years and a half. His death, however, cannot have happened much before the close of 857, and his father Egbert died in 836. His name, meaning noble aid, is variously spelt, and often appears in the contracted form of Athulphus; it is evidently the Adolphus of later times.

favourite son, eventually and permanently known as Alfred the Great. The royal child, now seven years old, had already visited Europe's ancient and illustrious capital: his father's fond partiality having sent him thither, with a large and splendid retinue, two years before. Upon this former visit Alfred was welcomed by the pope with some distinguished compliment; but posterity has found it far from easy to decide exactly upon its nature. Asser, Alfred's personal friend, literally, but rather darkly, states, that Leo, then pontiff, anointed him for king; and, taking him to himself as a son of his adoption, confirmed him<sup>1</sup>. The Saxon Chronicle, here, probably, written by Plegmund<sup>2</sup>, another of his personal friends, uses nearly the same words. From such language it is, at least, undeniable, that more than a single compliment was received by the infant Alfred. Nor does it seem hardly less certain, that one of the ceremonies by which Leo greeted him was intended as a solemn destination to his country's throne. Kingly

<sup>1</sup> "Quo tempore dominus Leo quartus apostolicæ sedi præerat, qui præfatum infantem Alfredum oppido ordinans in regem, et in filium adoptionis sibimet accipiens confirmavit."—ASSER. 7. See also Bampt. Lect. 246.

<sup>2</sup> "The first chronicles were, perhaps, those of Kent or Wessex; which seem to have been regularly continued, at intervals, by the archbishops of Canterbury, or by their direction, at least, as far as the year 1001, or even 1070; for the Benet MS., which some call the Plegmund MS., ends in the latter year; the rest being in Latin. From internal evidence, indeed, of an indirect nature, there is great reason to presume that Archbishop Plegmund transcribed, or superintended this very copy of the Saxon annals to the year 891, the year in which he came to the see; inserting, both before and after this date, to the time of his death in 923, such additional materials as he was well qualified to furnish from his high station and learning, and the confidential intercourse which he enjoyed in the court of King Alfred. The total omission of his own name, except by another hand, affords indirect evidence of some importance in support of this conjecture."—DR. INGRAM'S Preface to the Saxon Chr. xii.

power, among the Anglo-Saxons, though strictly confined within a royal caste, was not equally limited by primogeniture. Ethelwulf might argue, therefore, that papal sanction would afford authority sufficient for naming his favourite child as the successor to himself. From their acquaintance with such an intention, perhaps, arose the undutiful conduct of his elder sons, and the strong party which espoused their cause<sup>1</sup>. Much positive improvement could scarcely be reaped by any child of five years old, or of seven, from foreign travel. But a reminiscence, delightful, though indistinct, must have been permanently established in the mind of an Alfred from two such journeys. He could hardly fail, through life, of associating with Rome and the papacy all that was gratifying, venerable, polished, and magnificent. A clue is thus found for understanding a weak and sinful compliance which mortifies a Protestant inquirer into the history of this admirable king. Had any political encroachments upon him been attempted, he was far too wise, firm, and patriotic for enduring

---

<sup>1</sup> "Ethelwulf's visit to Rome without having resigned his crown, may have begun the discontent. Two of the preceding sovereigns of Wessex, who had taken this step, Cadwalla and Ina, had first abdicated the throne, though Offa retained it during his journey. But Ethelwulf had been in the church, and had not the warlike character of Offa to impress or satisfy his thanes and earls."—(TURNER. Hist. Angl.-Sar. i. 497.) Asser (8) darkly makes the conspiracy against Ethelwulf to originate in quâdam infamiâ. The Saxon Chronicle makes no mention of it, nor does Ethelwerd. Under this dearth of direct information, it may, perhaps, allowably be conjectured, that one cause of Ethelwulf's discredit among his people, was his known partiality to the infant Alfred, to the prejudice of his elder sons. It was, most probably, no secret that the pope had already anointed that favourite child; and it might be represented that his doting father had now sought the consummation of his injustice in taking him personally to the most venerated of spiritual authorities.

them. It is his fate, nevertheless, to fill no unimportant place among Anglo-Saxon builders of that Italian system which gradually undermined scriptural religion, and eventually degraded English policy. Nothing short of some strong seduction, like that of Alfred's early Roman predilections, might seem capable of winning so much piety and wisdom to break down the barrier nobly raised in England against the semi-pagan canons, by which Nice had astonished Western Europe. In this fatal abandonment of a holy cause, his name, however, stands painfully prominent. Posterity is driven to qualify its veneration for its character, by admitting that he must find a place among corruptors of the national religion.

Alfred was born at Wantage in Berkshire, then a portion of the royal domains, in the year 849. His mother, Osburgh, a person of excellent abilities and conspicuous piety, daughter to the royal cup-bearer, was descended from a family long pre-eminent among Anglo-Saxon nobles<sup>1</sup>. This parent Alfred unfortunately lost in infancy; his extraordinary talents, therefore, owed but little to her culture. Nor does any degree of scholarship appear to have entered into the plans of those who directed his earlier education. He was trained in the habits of a sportsman and a warrior<sup>2</sup>; but his twelfth year overtook him while yet unable to read<sup>3</sup>. He had shown, however, a considerable taste for literature, in his keen attention to the poems commonly recited in the royal presence<sup>4</sup>. By one of these beautifully written, Judith his mother-in-law, then disgraced by an incestuous marriage with his eldest brother<sup>1</sup>, endeavoured to shame the gross illiteracy of her new connexions. "I will give this," she said, "to that one of you, young people, who shall first learn it by heart." Alfred gazed eagerly upon the manuscript, fascinated particularly by an illuminated capital. "Now, will you really give?" he asked. Judith declared herself in earnest. Nothing more was needed by the resolute and intelligent boy. He applied himself instantly to learn his letters; nor did he rest until able to repeat accurately the poem that had so happily captivated his eye<sup>2</sup>. He now found his eager thirst of knowledge met by a mortifying repulse. Reading to any extent, or to much advantage, required a knowledge of Latin. Upon overcoming this new difficulty, he soon determined. But good instruction was not easily obtained, even by a prince<sup>3</sup>. The taste for learning, and the facilities for its cultivation which England once owed to Theodore, had become extinct under the protracted horrors of Scandinavian piracy. Alfred, however, feeling ignorance insupportable, was impelled by a generous energy to set ordinary obstacles at defiance, and he diligently sought instructors<sup>4</sup>. How effectually he profited by their aid, his literary labours most nobly testify. These evidences of learned industry are, indeed, sufficient for immortalising any name in a dark and tempestuous age. As the works of an author, unable even to read until fully twelve years old, and who grew into manhood

<sup>1</sup> ASSER. 4.<sup>2</sup> Ib. 16.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. Asser leaves it even doubtful whether Alfred's illite-	racy did not extend beyond his twelfth year.
	<sup>4</sup> Ib.

<sup>1</sup> ASSER. 13.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. 17.

<sup>4</sup> Alfred's principal instructors in Latin, were, according to his own account, Plegmund, Asser, Grimbold, and Erigena. (Pre- face to GREGORY'S Pastoral. SPELM. Vit. Alf. M. Append. 3, p. 197.) He was, probably, not acquainted with one of these four scholars during his youth.

before he had mastered Latin, they claim a distinguished place among victories of the human intellect.

On reaching maturity, Alfred served gloriously and incessantly in the armies of his brothers. Of these, the two eldest, Ethelbald and Ethelbert, reigned concurrently; the latter holding a subordinate authority over Kent, Sussex, and Essex; the portion of his paternal dominions left for their father's administration during his last two years. Both these princes quickly followed Ethelwulf to the tomb; and his third son, Ethered, became head of the royal family<sup>1</sup>. Alfred appears now to have had an opportunity, either of assuming the subordinate eastern sovereignty, or of being recognised as King of Wessex<sup>2</sup>. He contented himself with a secondary place under Ethered. Rarely has a sceptre been less tempting. But Alfred was unable to decline it long; Ethered, like former sons of Ethelwulf, being released early from an uneasy throne. An elder brother had left children<sup>3</sup>, whose prior claim Alfred, probably, would have willingly admitted. Any such forbearance was, however, so manifestly unsuitable to a time of urgent difficulty and danger, that these infant claimants

---

<sup>1</sup> Ethelbald died in 860, three years after his father. Ethelbert then added to the kingdom of Wessex his former dominion over the kingdoms of Kent, Sussex, and Essex. He governed this united kingdom with considerable success, during six years, and died in the year 866. Ethered succeeded in that year. Mr. Turner calls him Ethelred, as does Malmesbury; and there can be no doubt that this is the correct form of his name. But King Alfred's Will, Asser, the Saxon Chronicle, and Ethelwerd, write it Ethered, which, probably, comes more nearly to its ordinary pronunciation. It seems to be the Edridge or Etherege of later times.—Sax. Chr. 96, 97. Script. post Bed. f. 479. ASSER. 14, 24.

<sup>2</sup> ASSER. 24.

<sup>3</sup> Alfred left estates to Æthelm and Athelwold, each of them designated "my brother's son." Ethelbert appears to have been the father of both.—King Alfred's Will, 16, 17.

were unhesitatingly set aside. The nation would hear of no reluctance in their uncle, now in the very flower of manhood, but called him loudly to the royal dignity<sup>1</sup>. Alfred's reign opened with a serious disaster, undergone at Wilton, where the Danish arms gained a decided victory<sup>2</sup>. Various ill successes followed, which were constantly aggravated by a weak and temporising policy. Thus unfortunate, Alfred naturally became unpopular, and he completed the alienation of his people by haughtiness and tyranny<sup>3</sup>. His kinsman, St. Neot, rebuked him sharply for these intolerable defects, and foretold their sinister operation on his happiness<sup>4</sup>. The youth, even of an Alfred, was, however, proof against unpalatable warnings. The young king of Wessex found himself, <sup>1</sup> Asser (24) says that Alfred began to reign quasi invitus. His accession is placed in 871 by Asser and the Saxon Chronicle. Mr. Turner adopts this date; but the Editor of King Alfred's Will (6) refers Ethered's death to Apr. 23, 872. This is the year to which it is referred by Ingulf.—(Script. post Bed. 494.) Malmesbury also places Alfred's accession in that year.—Ib. 23.

<sup>2</sup> ASSER. 25.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. 31. From Alfred's conduct his friend and biographer, Asser, honestly admits that adversity came upon him non immeritò. To the stern severity of his rule, striking testimony is born by the Miroir des Justices, a production of Edward the First's reign, well known among legal antiquaries. Thence we learn that Alfred hanged forty-four judges in one year, for errors and malversations in the exercise of their functions.—(SPELM. Ælf. M. Vit. note, p.

80.) Considerable severity was, no doubt, necessary to overawe a barbarous people, during a season of extraordinary public difficulty; but severity like this was cruel, and must have been grossly unjust in several instances.

<sup>4</sup> ASSER. 32. A speech to this effect, attributed to St. Neot, is to be found in a Saxon homily.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Vespasian, D. 14. f. 146.) This homily is printed in Gorham's History and Antiquities of Eynesbury and St. Neot's. Lond. 1824, ii. 257. Part of St. Neot's speech is also given by Mr. Turner.—(Hist. Angl.-Sax. i. 549.) Mr. Gorham says of St. Neot, "The precise year of his death is not stated by any ancient authority, and can only be collected from circumstantial evidence: the most probable date is 877." (i. 44.) Mr. Turner places Alfred's retirement in 878.

accordingly, as little able to gain any mastery over his own impetuous passions, as any respite from the fierce rovers of Scandinavia. At length public affairs were apparently overwhelmed by hopeless ruin, and his lofty spirit was all but broken under a mortifying sense of general desertion. Unable further to resist aggression, or to rally his own dejected, offended people, he crouched indignantly before the storm, and wholly disappeared from public observation.

His place of retreat was a small thickly-wooded spot in Somersetshire, surrounded so completely and extensively by waters and morasses as to be almost inaccessible. In this deep and safe seclusion, the memorable isle of Athelney, he sought shelter and concealment with one of the royal herdsmen. By the mistress of his humble refuge he appears to have been unknown: probably, with her husband it was otherwise. The woman's ignorance of his quality may fairly be presumed from that very ancient and fascinating tale, which represents her as expecting him to watch some cakes baking by the fire, and venting angry verse, when she found him to have negligently let them burn. So, man! her irritated measures run:

*What? Slack and blind when the cakes want a turn!
You're greedy when they smoke upon the board<sup>1</sup>.*

<sup>1</sup> . . . . . Heus, homo!
Urere quos cernis panes, gyrare moraris?
Cum nimium gaudes hos manducare calentes? ASSER. 31.

It has been thought by many that the paragraph which contains this distich, and the whole story of Alfred with the neatherd's wife, is an interpolation. It is not found in the Cotton MS. of Asser;

and the printed text of that author would read quite as well without it. The woman's speech, too, being verse, is rather a suspicious circumstance. Mr. Turner, however, appears to consider it genuine (Hist. Angl.-Sax. i. 561), influenced probably by finding the tale in the Homily on St. Neot.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Colton. Vespasian,

But whatever might have been exactly Alfred's condition, while out of sight, it was not such, undoubtedly, as to cut off communication with his confidential friends. Hence he soon organized small but courageous bands of trusty followers, by whom the Danes were severely harassed in a quick succession of incursions mocking every calculation. Thus his people's ardour rapidly revived. Vigour, ability, and success, gave an importance to every sally from his lurking-place, which forbade remembrance of his late reverses and unpopularity. When ready for striking the decisive blow, early tradition paints him disguised as a wandering minstrel, and unguardedly admitted into the Danish camp. Its hostile inmates rise before the reader, enchanted by his matchless music, and rich profusion of legendary lore. They could not fail of greeting eagerly such a harper wherever his inquiring eye directed him<sup>1</sup>. Thus he must have entered on the field which saw the crisis of his fate, with information that a general very rarely can command. It proved an obstinate and sanguinary fight; but Alfred's military skill, admirably guiding the desperate valour of his troops, at length gladdened him with victory. His brave but baffled foe sought safety within the ramparts of an impregnable fortification. Around its base, Alfred

---

D. 14. f. 146.) But this MS. is in a Normanno-Saxon hand. The several pieces in it, of course, were transcribed from older MSS. Mr. Gorham conjectures with considerable probability, that the Homily on St. Neot was written about the middle of the eleventh century, and the tale of Alfred and the cakes interpolated from it into Asser.—(Hist. of Eynesbury and St. Neot's. Suppl. ii. cii. vol. i.

39.) Against this tale the silence of the Saxon Chronicle is also a presumption. In fact, that venerable record might us lead to consider Alfred's condition something less desperate than it has commonly been represented. Ethelwerd likewise has nothing of the tale, nor even Ingulf.

<sup>1</sup> INGULF. Script. post Bed. 494.

maintained a strict blockade, leaving the consummation of his hopes to privation and alarm. In fourteen days these irresistible allies proved him to have decided wisely. The Danes capitulated, on condition of receiving baptism, and settling as a peaceful colony in the eastern counties<sup>1</sup>. Henceforth Alfred, although ever harassed by apprehensions of invading Northmen, shone without eclipse the father of his people, the glory of his age.

Among proofs<sup>2</sup> of his title to contemporary gratitude and posthumous admiration, few are more conclusive than his literary labours. Of professed scholars once embarked in active life, it is often said that future opportunities for learned industry are hopeless. Alfred, a soldier and a statesman from education, office, and stern importunate necessity, found ample time for proving himself a student also. He nobly designed a vernacular literature, and his own personal exertions realised very considerably that wise and generous intention. No author had thrown so much light upon the national affairs as Bede: but he wrote in Latin. Unwilling that learned men alone should have access to their country's annals, Alfred rendered into Anglo-Saxon the venerable Northumbrian's Ecclesiastical History<sup>2</sup>. To spread information respecting foreign countries, he translated <sup>1</sup> ASSER. 34. Ethandum, supposed to be Yatton, near Chippenham, was the place of Alfred's decisive victory. The date of it is 878. Alfred himself stood godfather to Godrun, or Guthrum, the Danish chieftain. The Danish colony was to possess the country north of the Thames from its mouth to the mouth of the Lea, thence to the source of that river, thence it was to be bounded by the Watling Street to Bedford, thence the Ouse was to be its boundary to the sea.—SPELM. Vit. Ælf. M. 36, note.

<sup>2</sup> Alfred's Bede was first published by Whelock, at Cambridge, in 1643, afterwards by Smith, in 1722. It is not a servile translation, some things being omitted in it, and others abridged.

large selections from the historical work of Orosius, with geographical matter from other sources<sup>1</sup>. To diffuse a taste for literary gratification of a higher order, he freely rendered Boëthius On the Consolation of Philosophy<sup>2</sup>, a work then greatly valued by the few who read. He sought even to remedy the gross illiteracy of his clergy; translating for their use Pope Gregory's Pastoral, a text-book in the apportionment of penance<sup>3</sup>. Alfred's name has been inserted likewise in lists of scholars who provided ancient England with a Bible in her native tongue<sup>4</sup>. But he, probably, did no more than turn into Anglo-Saxon such portions of Scripture as appeared, from time to time, peculiarly suited for his own comfort and instruction<sup>5</sup>. He seems, however, to have been employed upon a regular translation of the Psalms when overtaken by a summons to eternity<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> The Orosius was published by Mr. Daines Barrington in 1773. Mr. Turner has given a long and interesting account of this work.—Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 79.

<sup>2</sup> Published by Mr. Rawlinson, in 1698, and again by Mr. Cardale, in 1829. The work contains much not in the original. Mr. Turner has given numerous extracts from it.—ii. 25.

<sup>3</sup> There are MSS. of this work in the British Museum, the Bodleian, the Public Library at Cambridge, and the Library of C. C. C. there. It is hardly creditable to England that this work has never been printed.

<sup>4</sup> SPELM. Vit. Ælf. M. 167. The authority for this is an ancient History of Ely.

<sup>5</sup> "Hic aut aliter, quamvis dissimili modo, in regiâ potestate Sacræ rudimenta Scripturæ divinitus instinctus præsumpsit incipere in venerabili Martini solemnitate; quos flosculos undecunque collectos à quibuslibet magistris discere, et in corpore unius libelli, mixtim quamvis, sicut hinc suppetebat redigere, usque adeo protelavit, quousque propemodum ad magnitudinem unius psalterii perveniret; quem Enchiridion suum id est manualementem librum, nominari voluit, eo quod ad manum illum die noctuque solertissimè habeat: in quo non mediocrè, sicut tunc aiebat, habebat solatium."—ASSER. 57.

<sup>6</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 24. There is reason also to believe that Alfred made translations from the Fables of Æsop, compiled a book of proverbs, and wrote a treatise on falconry.—(SPELM. Vit. Ælf.

He was then only fifty-two<sup>1</sup>, an age that might be fairly thought quite insufficient for laying solidly the foundations of national security, legislation, and literature. Alfred found, however, time for doing this. Yet incessant and sanguinary struggles against piratical invasion were not all the difficulties that taxed his ingenuity, consumed his time, and wore away his spirits. His towering intellect and indomitable energy were imprisoned in a most unhealthy frame. He seems to have been a sickly and a suffering child. As manhood opened on his view, he dreaded leprosy, or blindness, or some other such infirmity, as must keep him altogether from the haunts of men. His generous ambition shrank before this mortifying prospect, and earnestly did he desire that no physical affliction should render him unfit for the public eye, and exclude him from active duties. Having once gone into Cornwall with a hunting party, he came near the burial-place of a British saint<sup>2</sup>. His pious mind had ever viewed such spots as hallowed ground, and this was devoutly visited. Long was he prostrate, offering urgently humble suit to Heaven, that an unhappy constitution might not realize his most insupportable apprehensions. Journeying homeward he thought himself relieved; and some real and imaginary change freed him soon after from the fear of becoming

---

M.166. TURNER. Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 95, 96.) Some select versions from St. Austin by King Alfred are preserved among the Cotton MSS. Full information respecting this admirable prince's literary labours may be seen in Mr. Wright's Biographia Britannica Literaria, p. 393.

<sup>1</sup> The Saxon Chronicle (124) places Alfred's death in 901, and it is probably a contemporary authority. Other ancient authorities place it a year earlier.

<sup>2</sup> St. Guerir. The place, which is near Leskeard, was anciently called Ham-Stoke, afterwards on St. Neot's burial there, Neot-Stoke. It is the modern St. Neot's.—CAMBDEN. GORHAM'S Eynesbury and St. Neot's, 29.

politically dead<sup>1</sup>. If his pains, however, lost any portion of their intensity, he found it nothing more than a temporary respite. The gross and prolonged festivity that celebrated his nuptials, effectually doomed him to a life of misery<sup>2</sup>. His natural infirmities were hopelessly aggravated by that fatal blow; henceforth, he was racked habitually by agonizing pain, and often thought himself on the verge of dissolution: nor, when intervals of ease allowed him to recruit his strength, could he shake off a horrid apprehension of impending torture<sup>3</sup>. Vainly did he seek the most approved advice: physicians could not even name his malady<sup>4</sup>. Here probably, they would have been surpassed by the abler practitioners of later times; but it may well be doubted, whether any proficiency in the healing art could have ministered effectual relief to Alfred. His constitution appears to have been radically bad; and internal cancer, or some other such incurable disease, might seem to have thriven, with malignant luxuriance, in a soil that early sickness had most effectually prepared.

A principal secret for benefiting society and attaining eminence, is economy of time. Deeply sensible of this, Alfred provided a specific employment for every coming hour. The natural day he seems to have divided into three equal portions: one for sleep and refreshment, another for public duties, and a third for God's especial service<sup>5</sup>. Under this last head were included not only

<sup>1</sup> ASSER. 40.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. 42.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. 40. Alfred appears to have suffered, in early life, under the excrescence called ficus by surgeons.—(Ib.) Mr. Turner suggests that the sufferings of Alfred's mature life arose, probably, either from internal cancer, or from some derangement of the biliary functions.—Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 155, note.

<sup>5</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 24. Asser (65) states that Alfred devoted the half of his time to God, but he gives no particureligious exercises, in which no monk was more unsparing and regular than Alfred, but also those literary labours, which he wisely ranked among the most powerful instruments for dispensing heavenly light. His country possessed no other measurement of time than close observation of the sun's progress. This was far too incomplete and unexact for Alfred: hence he caused wax candles to be made of equal weight, and each twelve inches long, every inch being distinctly marked and numbered. Six of these were provided for every twenty-four hours, and by their successive combustion Alfred could ascertain how far the day was gone. Upon this contrivance, however, he quickly found himself unable to rely, unless the air was perfectly serene. It was but rarely so, even in the rude, unglazed apartments of an Anglo-Saxon palace; much less so in a tent: hence arose a new demand on Alfred's ingenuity. He now fitted thin plates of horn into a wooden framework, and thus protected his waxen clocks from every blast, while the semi-transparent case enabled him to watch their progress. Posterity may smile to learn that stable lanterns are an invention, or an importation, which it owes to the immortal Alfred<sup>1</sup>. It must admire that lars. His account, therefore, if presented in detail, might be found to differ very little from that of Malmesbury.

<sup>1</sup> Alfred's clock-cases appear to have excited the wonder of his rude subjects and associates. Asser thus mentions them (69):—"Quæ itaque lanterna mirabiliter ex lignis et cornibus, ut ante diximus, facta." Alfred, however, might not have drawn this wonderful invention from the unassisted resources of his own genius, but only have refined somewhat upon a convenience that he had seen in Italy, and have applied it to a more dignified use. It appears from Plautus, that horn lanterns were known to the ancient Romans:—

"Quo ambulas tu, qui Vulcanum in cornu conclusum geris?"

Amphitr. act i. sc. 1, l. 185.

Nor was glass absolutely unattainable in Alfred's time, Benedict Biscop having brought some, long before, to his monastery at Wearmouth. It was however very industry and perseverance which could effect so much, when these humble instruments were the best within a king's command for maintaining strict economy of time.

Though liberal, Alfred was exact in economizing money. The rude hospitality of his court was maintained by the royal domains, which were not let to tenants, but merely managed by bailiffs<sup>1</sup>. Our ancient kings were thus the largest farmers in their dominions; and, like other occupiers of land, they drew the necessaries of life directly from the soil: their pecuniary resources must necessarily have been extremely scanty. Of these, however (such was his magnanimous piety), Alfred strictly devoted one-half to religion and learning<sup>2</sup>. One-fourth of this generous appropriation was regularly distributed in alms, another was remitted to the monasteries of Athelney and Shaftesbury, founded by himself<sup>3</sup>, a third was disbursed in promoting education at Oxford<sup>4</sup>, and the last was reserved for monastic establishments, either abroad or at home. The remain-rare, probably, and expensive: hence, as horn would answer his purpose, Alfred might not think of such costly materials for his lanterns.—SPELM. Vit. Ælf. M. 162.

<sup>1</sup> Ib. 161.      <sup>2</sup> ASSER. 66.

<sup>3</sup> Athelney was for men, Shaftesbury for women. In the latter, Alfred's own daughter became abbess. Asser says (61), that the monastic profession was then at a very low ebb in England, no particular rule being ordinarily observed with any strictness.

<sup>4</sup> Asser does not mention Oxford, but he mentions only one school: tertiam scholæ, quam ex multis suæ proprie gentis studio-

sissimè congregaverat. Bromton (X. Script. 818), evidently writing with Asser before him, places the school at Oxford: tertiam scolari-bus Oxoniæ noviter congregatis. Oxford's obligations to Alfred are indeed indubitable. The only question is, whether he did not rather restore and augment that venerable seat of learning, than found it. If a paragraph in Asser be genuine (52), the former service was that rendered by the great king of Wessex; but this paragraph is wanting some of the MSS.; and hence Cambridge men, desirous of denying superiority to the sister university, have pronounced it an interpolation.

ing half of his revenues Alfred divided into three portions only. Of these, the first paid his officers, the second was expended upon buildings and mechanical arts, the third upon learned foreigners, whom his judicious patriotism anxiously sought for his own ignorant and unpolished country<sup>1</sup>.

As an ecclesiastical legislator, Alfred appears to have done little more than confirm the sanctions of his more approved predecessors. Having made a digest from the laws of Ina and Offa, kings of Mercia, and from those of Ethelbert, the first Christian sovereign of Kent, he submitted it to his legislature, and obtained a solemn confirmation of it<sup>2</sup>. Under him, accordingly, the privilege of sanctuary was again legally recognised, and especial protection extended to churches and ecclesiastics. His treaty with Godrun, which planted a Danish colony in the eastern counties, throws further light upon ecclesiastical affairs. Alfred stipulates in this, for the payment of tythes, Rome-shot, light-shot, and plough-alms, providing by pecuniary fines against disobedience<sup>3</sup>. The two last named of these dues now appear (at least under those particular designations), for the first time among the legislative records of England<sup>4</sup>. Another testimony is thus borne to the very high

<sup>1</sup> ASSER. 66.

<sup>2</sup> Præf. Al. M. ad LL. suas. SPELM. Conc. i. 363. WILK. i. 190.

<sup>3</sup> LL. sub Alf. et Guth. SPELM. Conc. i. 377.

<sup>4</sup> The light-shot of Alfred's code may answer, perhaps, to the church-shot made payable under a heavy penalty, by the laws of Ina. The plough-alms are thought to have been an offering made to the church, in proportion to the number of plough-lands holden by the payers. This due is not mentioned by name in Alfred's own treaty with Godrun as now extant: we find specified there only tythes, Rome-fee, light-shot, and "Dei rectitudines aliquas." In the renewal of this treaty, however, under Edward the Elder, plough-alms are inserted.—SPELM. i. 392. WILK. i. 293.

antiquity of a payment for the exigencies of public worship, independently of tythes. What private owner of an estate can produce a title for his property, so old by many centuries, as this enlightened monarch's constitutional recognition of the Church's title to a rent-charge upon it for the due celebration of divine offices? It is observable, too, that Alfred's legislation leaves no room for pleading that ecclesiastical dues were ordinarily rendered upon grounds merely religious. Civil penalties protected the clergy in their maintenance<sup>1</sup>, the Church in her dues, and Rome in her claims upon every householder's penny.

Alfred's appearance as an ecclesiastical legislator has, however, inflicted a severe wound upon his memory. He prefaces his laws by the Decalogue, and many other sanctions, drawn from the sacred texts of Moses; but his Decalogue offers not a trace of the second commandment in its proper situation: a slight hint of it only is thrust down to the tenth place, and this is worded so as to give an iconolater ample room for subterfuge and evasion<sup>2</sup>. Evidently, therefore, Anglo-Saxon divines reprobated no longer the second council of Nice, and Alfred was contented to naturalise among his countrymen its insidious decrees. Rome had, indeed, gained early upon his affections; and the centre of civilization was but little likely to lose its hold upon such a mind: his venerated relative, also, St. Neot, was smitten so deeply by attachment to that celebrated city, that he journeyed to it no fewer than seven times<sup>3</sup>.

---

<sup>1</sup> Of civil penalties guarding the right to tythes, probably no earlier record is known. Such might, however, have been provided by the laws of Offa, to which Alfred appeals, but which are lost.

<sup>2</sup> See Bampton Lectures, 248.

<sup>3</sup> He genesode Rome-burh seofe

Alfred himself, too, entertained a high regard for relics<sup>1</sup>, the superstitious merchandise of Rome. Nor among the compliments that he received, was any one, probably, more acceptable than a fragment of some size, presented by the pope, as a portion of our Saviour's cross<sup>2</sup>. The whole stream of contemporary theology, and his own translation of Pope Gregory's Pastoral, attest sufficiently his belief in the necessity of a strict personal satisfaction for sin. His friend and biographer, Asser, accordingly represents the unpopularity that so severely tried him in early life, as mercifully sent by Providence, to exact a penalty which he must have paid, but which could never fall so lightly as while the body lasted<sup>3</sup>. Alfred's own view is probably here detailed; and, reasoning upon this principle, he must have been consoled under the wearing intensity of bodily distress. His authority, therefore, might be colourably pleaded, in favour of the penitential doctrines eventually prevailing among schoolmen, and artfully evaded at Trent. Alfred, however, in common with other luminaries of his age, only lent an unconscious aid in the foundation of a system, essentially different from their own, and much more seductive. Their penitential doctrines had no reference to that perilous anodyne, technically termed in after ages, sacramental absolution. Hence Anglo-Saxon views of man's reconciliation with his God, although not exactly Protestant, varied importantly from those of the Trentine Catechism<sup>4</sup>. Extravagant assertions of papal supremacy, sithen Xpe to lofe and seincte Petre. | seven times, in honour of Christ and St. Peter.

---

 (Hom. in S. Neot. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Vespasian, D. 14. f. 143.) He visited Rome-city | <sup>1</sup> ASSER. 41. <sup>2</sup> Ib. 39. <sup>3</sup> Ib. 32. <sup>4</sup> See Bampton Lectures, p. 285

occasioning eventually so many offensive acts and acrimonious debates, were unknown to the days of Alfred. Had such been advanced, it is far from likely that veneration for the papacy would have betrayed him into any concession that tarnishes the honour of a nation, and outrages reason. Roman pretensions, when fully before the world, were never admitted by our ablest sovereigns. But English royalty can boast no abler name than that of Alfred. That illustrious prince, it should also be remembered, must have dissented from transubstantiation, the great distinctive feature of modern Romanism. His age first saw eucharistic worshippers invited formally to deny the evidence of sense; and Alfred seems to have patronised Erigena, a celebrated opponent of that startling novelty<sup>1</sup>. Plainly untenable, therefore, countenance he lay under at Rome. From all which we may conclude, the correspondence between England and Rome was not very close; and that this prince and the English Church were not servilely governed by that see."—(Eccl. Hist. i. 171.) Mabillon infers from circumstantial evidence that Alfred's friend was not Erigena, as Malmesbury and other ancient authors considered, but John of Corbie. Anxiety to extenuate evidence against transubstantiation, probably, led him into this opinion: which is opposed, among other things, by Asser's description of Alfred's John, as acerrimi ingenii virum, et in omnibus disciplinis literatorie artis eruditissimum. No account would better suit Erigena.—See MOSHEIM. ii., 213, new ed.

<sup>1</sup> Collier mentions Alfred's remittances to Rome of Peter-pence, by the hands of bishops and other great men; and he mentions the return made by the pope, of an alleged fragment from our Saviour's cross, and of an exemption from taxes to the English school at Rome. He then adds: "But notwithstanding these civilities, we meet with no letters of compliment or submission: we find no learned men sent from Rome to assist the king in his scheme for the revival of arts and sciences; there is no intercourse of legates upon record; no interposings in the councils and regulations of the church; no bulls of privilege for the new abbeys of Winchester and Athelney; and, which is more, King Alfred, as we have seen, entertained Johannes Scotus Erigena, and treated him with great regard, notwithstanding the dis-

are Romish claims to the only English sovereign whom posterity has dignified as the Great. Alfred lived in a superstitious age, and before many theological questions, afterwards debated fully, had called for critical examination. His belief, therefore, cannot be identified strictly and accurately with that of the modern Church of England. He knew nothing, however, of sacramental devices for speaking peace to a conscience, merely attrite; and he denied, in common with all his countrymen, the rising principle of transubstantiation. Now these two doctrines are essential to the Romish belief of later times, and are the main pillars of its hold upon mankind. English Romanists, therefore, are egregiously mistaken in taking credit for the profession of a creed identical with that of Alfred.

Of his most illustrious literary friend, John Scotus Erigena, the birthplace has been disputed. That scholar's ordinary designation, however, which is no other than John the Irish-born Scot, renders it hardly doubtful that he was born in Ireland, often called anciently the Greater Scotland. His family appears to have been of Saxon origin. Many of his earlier years were spent in France, where he stood foremost among learned men. Charles the Bald esteemed him highly, and admitted him to the most familiar intercourse. By that enlightened prince he was desired, together with Ratramn, to examine critically those eucharistic doctrines by which Paschasius Radbert had recently amazed the world. Erigena, like Ratramn, vindicated the evidence of sense, assigning a figurative character to our Lord's words at the last supper<sup>1</sup>. That numerous class which is ever eagerly upon the watch for something new and surprising, was probably very little pleased with scholars, however eminent, thus employed. Erigena seems also to have given offence by some of his writings upon the predestinarian controversy<sup>1</sup>. He gladly, therefore, accepted an invitation from Alfred to pass over into England, and his patron provided for him by a professorship at Oxford. He removed subsequently to the abbey of Malmesbury, still undertaking the instruction of youth. In this employment Erigena rendered himself hateful to his pupils, who, provoked by his morose manners, and stern discipline, murdered him with their penknives<sup>2</sup>.

---

<sup>1</sup> See Bampton Lectures, 418.

<sup>1</sup> CAVE. Hist. Lit. 548. This controversy was excited by Godeschalc, a monk of Orbais, about the middle of the ninth century.—(See MOSHEIM. ii. 211, new ed.) Collier, after mentioning Alfred's invitation to Erigena as a presumption against England's belief at that time in transubstantiation, thus proceeds: "Cressy seems apprehensive of this inference, and endeavours to fence against it. He affirms, in the first place from Hoveden, that Scotus had brought himself under a just infamy in France, upon the score of his heterodoxy. This imputation made him desire to retreat into England. But in this relation Cressy misrepresents Hoveden; for this historian asserts no more than that Scotus was eclipsed in his reputation, which is no wonder, considering the letter Pope Nicholas wrote to Charles the Bald, to his disadvantage,—where he taxes him with unsound opinions, but without naming any particulars. 'Tis true Hoveden does say he laid under an ill report, but, that this historian thought he deserved it, we have no reason to conclude."—(Eccl. Hist. i. 165.) Nor, probably, have we any reason to conclude that Erigena had given so much offence by his writings upon the eucharist as by those upon predestination.

<sup>2</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 24. SIM. DUNELM. X. Script. 149. Fuller, Collier, and Inett, make penknives to have been the instruments of Erigena's death. Graphiis, however, is the word used by Malmesbury, and Simeon of Durham, a word by which Du Cange, with every appearance of probability, understands iron styles used in writing. Fuller supposes (Ch. Hist. 119,) but seemingly with no great reason, that the murder of Erigena is attributable to the rancour of controversy: "Indeed Scotus detested some superstitions of the times, especially about the presence in the Lord's Supper; and I have read that his book, De Eucharistiâ, was condemned in the Vercellian Synod for some passages therein by Pope Leo. This makes it

In happier times, however, Erigena had been famed for a ready playfulness of wit<sup>1</sup>. But his sportive sallies appear to have been always tinged by satire, and, probably, the most discerning of those who had enjoyed his talent for enlivening society, would have named acerbity of temper among the exciting causes to which they were indebted for amusement. Erigena's violent death long caused him, rather strangely as it seems, to be venerated as a martyr. Berenger, however, effectively obscured his posthumous reputation. By appealing to his work upon the Eucharist, he procured its formal condemnation<sup>2</sup>. Thus, Erigena, whom Alfred valued among writers as a theological authority, has long been condemned by Romanists to wear the brand of heresy.

Under Alfred's son and successor, Edward the Elder, occurred, according to Malmesbury, a very remarkable and successful exercise of papal power. Formosus, the Roman pontiff, we are told, sent an epistle into England, cursing and excommunicating the king with all his suspicious that some hands of more age, and heads of more malice, than schoolboys, might guide the penknives which murdered Scotus, because of his known opposition against some practices and opinions of that ignorant age."

---

<sup>1</sup> Simeon of Durham has preserved the following specimen of his wit. Sitting one day at table opposite Charles the Bald, and being rather severe upon a nobleman present, the king asked him, "What is there between a Scot and a sot?" (Sot, Fr. a fool.) "Only this table!" was Erigena's fire and caustic reply.

<sup>2</sup> At the Council of Vercelli, in 1050.—(LABB. et Coss. ix. 1056.)

Mosheim (ii. 235, new ed.) considers Erigena to have been by far the clearest and most powerful of Radbert's opponents, showing no appearance whatever of any leaning towards a belief in the corporeal presence. Perhaps quite so much cannot be safely said of Ratramn, and this may be the reason why Berenger rested so much upon the former author, and why his work has wholly disappeared; nothing less could be expected of any work synodically condemned in the eleventh century. Erigena's extraordinary acuteness, indeed, could hardly fail of leading him into very precise and guarded language.

people, because the whole of Wessex had been destitute of bishops fully seven years. On receiving this, Edward might seem to have convened a synod, and Plegmund, archbishop of Canterbury, to have presided over it. In that assembly it was determined to supply the vacancies and erect three new sees. The primate is then represented as proceeding to Rome with honourable presents, laying the synod's decree before the pope, obtaining his approbation, and consecrating seven bishops in one day<sup>1</sup>.

This fulminating epistle came from Formosus, we learn, in the year 904<sup>2</sup>. That pontiff, however, died in the year 896<sup>3</sup>. Undoubtedly he did not rest quietly in his grave. His successor, Stephen, not contented with rescinding his decrees, had his corpse disinterred, arraigned before a council, stripped of the pontifical robes, and buried ignominiously among laymen. Nor were the two fingers chiefly used in consecration deemed worthy even of this interment. They were cut off and thrown into the Tyber<sup>4</sup>. These contumelies overtook the body of Formosus in the year 897, and it seems afterwards to have lain undisturbed in its unhonoured grave. Baronius, accordingly, is driven to admit some chronological mistake in Malmesbury's relation; but he is naturally unwilling to forego a case so useful for establishing the ancient exercise of papal authority over England. Hence, he suggests an earlier date by ten years as the proper one for this transaction<sup>5</sup>. Alfred, however, was then upon the throne, and not Edward the Elder. Two

<sup>1</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed.
26.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.

<sup>3</sup> INETT. i. 297.

<sup>4</sup> PLATINA. 114. Boniface VI. is placed by Platina between Formosus I. and Stephen VI. But this intermediate pontiff appears not to have lived a month after his elevation.

<sup>5</sup> INETT. i. 297.

of the vacancies, also, said to have drawn down papal excommunication in 904, did not occur until five years afterwards<sup>1</sup>. Although, therefore, it may be true that Plegmund consecrated seven bishops in a single day<sup>2</sup>, yet there is no reason for believing the act to have been extorted by any pontiff's malediction. Had such been the truth, allusions to it must have been found in earlier authorities than Malmesbury. It is, however, likely that a council was really holden for partitioning the western dioceses, as deaths allowed facilities for such a change. Nor is it surprising that subsequent authors, finding a simultaneous effect given to some new arrangement, should have drawn upon their imaginations to make it

<sup>1</sup> Viz., the vacancy made by the death of Denewulf, bishop of Winchester, and that made by the death of Asser, bishop of Sherborne, Alfred's biographer. Denewulf is said to have been the identical neatherd, under whose roof Alfred sought concealment at Athelney. Denewulf's promotion to the see of Winchester, however, took place in 879. It was only in the preceding year when Alfred lay hidden at Athelney. He is said, of course, to have found his host possessed of extraordinary abilities, but still it is anything rather than credible that Alfred should have considered a man, whom he had known as a neatherd one year, qualified for the see of Winchester in the next.—WHARTON. Angl. Sacr. i. 208, 554.

<sup>2</sup> Wharton (ut supra) expresses himself unwilling to reject the tradition of Plegmund's seven-fold consecration, and therefore he suggests, as the best mode of obviating difficulties, that a council was probably holden in 904, or in the next year, for partitioning the western dioceses, and that its provisions were not carried into execution till 909, when Denewulf and Asser died. The seven consecrations appear to have been for Winchester, Wells, Crediton, Sherborne, St. Petrock's in Bodmin, Dorchester, and Chichester.—(Antiqu. Brit. 112.) Collier, after mentioning Malmesbury's relation, thus proceeds:—"The Register of the Priory of Canterbury speaks much to the same purpose, but with this remarkable addition,—that there was a particular provision made for the Cornishmen to recover them from their errors; for that country, as the Record speaks, refused to submit to truth, and took no notice of the pope's authority."—(Eccl. Hist. i. 171.) The original words are,—nam antea in quantum potuerunt, veritati resistebant, et non decretis apostolicis obediebant.—SPELM. i. 388. WILK. i. 200.

square exactly with their own prejudices, and the habits which they saw established.

Edward the Elder was succeeded by Athelstan, his eldest son, but illegitimate. He nobly obliterated the stain of discreditable birth. By his vigour and ability, he really became monarch of England. In the decisive battle of Brunanburh he crushed the Danish sovereignty, to which Northumbria and the eastern counties had hitherto owned obedience<sup>1</sup>. By taking Exeter from the Welsh, he laid securely the foundations of Anglo-Saxon dominion over the western extremity of England<sup>2</sup>. A reign of so much military activity, and of no long continuance<sup>3</sup>, is naturally deficient in materials for ecclesiastical history. Athelstan was, however, a religious prince, and eminently liberal to monasteries<sup>4</sup>. Nor was he unmindful of a provision for the ordinary exigences of piety. A legislative assembly, holden at Grateley<sup>5</sup>, enacts that tythes should be strictly paid, not only upon crops, but also upon live stock<sup>6</sup>. Another account of this assembly's decrees provides also for the payment of church-shot<sup>7</sup>. In both records is found an injunction to the royal stewards for charging every crown estate with a certain eleemosynary contribution. Provision is likewise made against violation of churches, and profana-

<sup>1</sup> The site of this important battle has not been ascertained.—TURNER. Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 185.

<sup>2</sup> "Urbem Excestriam Cornwallensibus abstulit, quam turribus, et muro munivit, et quadratis lapidibus."—JOHAN. TINMOUTH, Historia Aurea. Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 12. f. 74.

<sup>3</sup> Athelstan was chosen king in 925, and he died in 941.—(Sax. Chr. 139, 145.) Malmesbury places Athelstan's accession in 924, as also does Mr. Turner.

<sup>4</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 26.

<sup>5</sup> The name of this place does not appear in the body of the record, nor is it stated that any other advice was taken than that of Wulfhelm, the archbishop, and the bishops.

<sup>6</sup> SPELM. Conc. i. 396. WILK. i. 205.

<sup>7</sup> SPELM. Conc. i. 402.

tion of Sunday, as also for the management of ordeals. Another constitution, probably of this time, attests the continuance of a judicious anxiety, long prevalent, for the foundation of village churches. It shews besides, that our Anglo-Saxon ancestors did not make rank in society a mere matter of caste. The dignity of thane, or gentleman, was open to every one possessed of a certain property, provided with the usual appendages of wealth, and admitted among the royal officers. But then one of such a person's qualifications was a church upon his estate<sup>1</sup>. A wealthy aspirant of inferior origin would be careful to prevent any deficiency in this particular from crossing his ambitious views.

As the whole period from the death of Alcuin to that of Athelstan is remarkably deficient in literary monuments, its doctrinal character is necessarily rather a matter of inference than of direct evidence. From Alfred's mutilated decalogue, however, a triumph must

---

<sup>1</sup> Ib. 406. "If a churl thrived so as to have five hides of his own land, a church, and kitchen, a bell-tower, a seat, and an office in the king's court, from that time forward he was esteemed equal in honour to a thane."—(JOHNSON'S Transl.) "It has been observed that a Triburg, that is, ten or more families of freemen, eat together. But it will appear that every thane's, or great man's family, was of itself esteemed a Triburg by law, 14 of Edw. Conf. 1065; therefore, at that time for a man to have a kitchen for the dressing of his own meat might well be esteemed the mark of a thane."—(Ib. note.) "The bell-house may denote the hall, which was the place of ordinary diet and entertainment in the houses of lords. It may well so signify, if the Saxons used the like reason in imposing the name on the lord's hall, as some say, the Italians, Spanish, and French have done in calling it Tinello, Tinelo, and Tinel; which in our laws also is retained in Tinel le Roy, for the King's Hall."—(SPELMAN. Titles of Honour. Lond. 1631, p. 623.) "Tinel. C'est le lieu où les domestiques des grands seigneurs mangent."—(MÉNAGE, in voc.) The word seems to have come from the tingling, or sound of the bell used in announcing meals. The seat or burh-geat-sell, as the Saxon has it, Selden considers to mean, a judicial seat, or court for the tenants.

have been gained by image-worship. In the train of this insidious usage could hardly fail of following some disposition for invoking angelic and departed spirits. But that practice was not yet established. Alfred's friendship for Erigena, and the decisive testimony borne by a subsequent age against transubstantiation, prove sufficiently that England still continued completely free from the main distinction of modern Romanism.

---

CHAPTER IV.

FROM DUNSTAN TO THE CONQUEST.

928—1066.

THE MONASTIC SYSTEM—BIRTH OF DUNSTAN—HIS EDUCATION—INTRODUCTION TO COURT—EXPULSION THENCE—DISINCLINATION TO A MONASTIC LIFE—SUBSEQUENT ADOPTION OF ONE—FOUNDATION OF GLASTONBURY ABBEY—THE BENEDICTINES FIRST ESTABLISHED—LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF LONDON—ARCHBISHOP ODO—HIS CANONS—ETHELWOLD—EDWY—DUNSTAN'S EXILE—HIS RETURN—HIS ADVANCEMENT TO THE SEE OF CANTERBURY—EDGAR—LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF ANDOVER—CIVIL PENALTIES AGAINST THE SUBTRACTION OF TYTHES—OTHER LEGISLATIVE ENACTMENTS UNDER EDGAR—OPPOSITION TO THE MONASTIC SYSTEM—OSWALD—MONKISH MIRACLES—LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF WINCHESTER—OF CALNE—EDWARD THE MARTYR—ETHELRED THE UNREADY—DEATH OF DUNSTAN—HIS INDEPENDENT REPLY TO THE POPE—PRETENDED TRANSFER OF HIS REMAINS TO GLASTONBURY—LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF EANHAM—OF HABA—ECCLESIASTICAL DUES—ELFRIC, ASCERTAINED PARTICULARS OF HIS LIFE—HIS WORKS—OBSCURITY OF HIS HISTORY—PROBABLE OUTLINE OF IT—MENTION OF HIS NAME BY MALMESBURY AND OSBERN—APPARENT CAUSE OF THE INJUSTICE DONE TO HIS MEMORY—CANUTE—LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF WINCHESTER UNDER HIM—EDWARD THE CONFESSOR—STIGAND—HAROLD'S FOUNDATION FOR SECULAR CANONS—DOCTRINES.

ANGLO-SAXON Ecclesiastical History between Athelstan and the Conquest, is distinctly marked by a controversy that agitated every branch of society. From various and obvious causes, ascetic principles are likely to become popular, at any time, among religious professors. Oriental Christians had early been smitten with admiration of monkish devotees<sup>1</sup>. By this example of her elder sister, the western Church was readily infected; and the fifth century produced in Benedict, an Italian monk, a monastic patriarch of her own. The system of this eminent recluse had gained extensive celebrity abroad, before England bestowed upon it any great attention. Wilfrid's claim as the importer of it scarcely merits notice, as not a single Benedictine monastery seems to have arisen from his efforts. The country, it is true, was early and abundantly supplied with well-endowed conventual foundations. But these were colleges, rather than regular monasteries. They provided accommodation for ordinary clergymen, education for youth, and a home for some few ascetics bound by solemn vows<sup>1</sup>. Such establishments were obviously unfavourable to the strict discipline of a cloister, and monks had consequently sunk in popular estimation. When Alfred, accordingly, founded his religious house at Athelney, he was driven to seek a motley group of monkish inmates for it from every quarter<sup>2</sup>. Scandinavian piracy was assigned as a reason why the Anglo-Saxons possessed so little taste for monachism<sup>3</sup>. But England, probably, had never offered, in societies exclusively and uniformly ascetic, any sufficient facilities for nurturing such a disposition. The munificence which had consecrated so many spots by religious houses,

---

<sup>1</sup> See Hist. Ref. ii. 51.

<sup>1</sup> WHARTON. Angl. Sacr. ii. 91. "Siquidem a temporibus antiquis, ibidem et episcopus cum clero, et abbas solebat manere cum monachis, qui tamen et ipsi ad curam episcopi familiariter pertinerent." —MARSHAM. Propyl. Monasticon.

<sup>2</sup> "In quo monasterio diversi generis monachos undique congregavit." —ASSER. 61.

<sup>3</sup> "Per multa retroacta annorum curricula monasticæ vitæ desiderium ab illâ totâ gente, nec non a multis allis gentibus fundi-

tus desierat; quamvis per plurima adhuc monasteria in illâ regione constructa permaneant: nullo tamen regulam illius vitæ ordinabiliter tenente (nescio quare), aut pro alienigenarum infestationibus, quæ sæpissime terrâ marique hostiliter irrumpunt, aut etiam pro nimîâ illius gentis in omni genere divitiarum abundantîâ, propter quam multo magis id genus despectæ monasticæ vitæ fieri existimo." —ASSER. 61.

appears, indeed, usually to have been stimulated by palpable deficiencies of religious instruction. In raising and endowing a minster, the vernacular form of monasterium, Anglo-Saxon piety had apparently little else in view than a church for ordinary worship, surrounded by a body of clergymen, who might both serve it and itinerate in the neighbourhood. Eventually many of these establishments became monasteries, in the sense affixed to that word by after ages. But one part of the generation, witnessing this change, condemned it as an injustice based upon delusion. The other part, probably, assumed without reflection or inquiry, that an ecclesiastical foundation of any magnitude would most completely answer the pious donor's meaning, in the hands of professed ascetics, bound regularly to certain mortifications. Innovations upon established usage and vested interests, require, however, time and perseverance. A complete monastic triumph was accordingly delayed until after the Norman Conquest<sup>1</sup>.

The struggle that achieved it, originated in the talents, energy, and address of one celebrated individual. Dunstan was born, a contemporary says, in the reign of Athelstan<sup>2</sup>; but his birth hardly could have been later <sup>1</sup> W. Thorn informs us, that the secular canons were not expelled for the cathedral church of Canterbury until the year 1005.—(X. Script. 1780.) Nor did this expulsion, then, meet with a ready acquiescence. On the contrary, the intrusive monks were not firmly established in possession until the primacy of Lanfranc.—INETT. i. 329.

<sup>2</sup> "Hujus (Æthelst.) imperii temporibus oritur puer strenuus in West-Saxonum finibus, cui pater Heorstanus, mater verò Cynethrith vocitatur."—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Cleopatra, B. 13. f. 60.) This life appears to have been written by Bridferth, a monk of Ramsey, eminent for mathematical knowledge. It has been printed by Mabillon, in the Acta Sanctorum, from a foreign MS. containing a preface which the Cotton MS. wants, but not offering so good a text.—(WRIGHT'S than the very year of that king's accession. It was probably earlier. Dunstan's father was named Herstan; his mother, Kynedrid. They were high among the nobility of Wessex, and lived near Glastonbury, a residence remarkably calculated for making a powerful and permanent impression upon the expanding mind of an intelligent and imaginative child. Glastonbury drew a character of solemn and picturesque seclusion from the fishy waters that guarded its approach on every side. The most venerable tradition marked Avalon as a holy isle. It was now a royal domain<sup>1</sup>; could show a church erected long before the Saxon conversion<sup>2</sup>; boasted of a sanctity that attracted pilgrims from Ireland; who doubly valued its facilities for study and religion, because it passed for their own Patrick's burial-place<sup>3</sup>. The ancient Cimbric race, yet lingering, probably, throughout the west of England, and sole inhabitants of Cornwall, looked upon the glassy isle with profound respect. It seems to have been honoured as the cradle of their ancient church<sup>4</sup>;

Biog. Brit. Lit. 443.) Osbern softens the names of Dunstan's parents into Herstan and Kynedrida, and places his birth in the first year of Athelstan.—(Angl. Sacr. ii. 90.) This year is not certainly fixed, but it can hardly be earlier than 924. Even this date, however, would only make Dunstan seventeen at Athelstan's death. Hence Wharton conjectures that he was born towards the close of Edward the Elder's reign.—Angl. Sacr. iii. 116, note.

<sup>1</sup> "Erat autem quædam regalis in confinio ejusdem præfati viri (Heorstan.) insula, antiquorum vicinorum vocabulo Glestonia nuncupata."—(Cleop. B. 13. f. 31.)

"Glastonia, regalibus stipendiis addicta."—OSBERN. 91.

<sup>2</sup> See Introduction.

<sup>3</sup> "Maximè ob beati Patricii senioris honorem, qui faustus ibidem in Domino quievisse narratur."—Cleop. B. 13. f. 63.

<sup>4</sup> "Quatenus ecclesia Domini nostri, Jesu Christi, et perpetuæ Virginis Mariæ, sicut in regno Britanniæ est prima, et fons et origo totius religionis."—(Carta Inæ, R. Monast. i. 13.) To many of these charters, claiming very high antiquity, but little credit is due. They are, however, likely to embody some ancient traditions. Probability is given to this tradition from the interand Arthur, most glorious of their warriors, was eventually found entombed within its hallowed boundaries<sup>1</sup>. The fame of Glastonbury depended, however, chiefly on tradition. Of any British monastery there, few traces had survived. Pious and well-informed minds, could not recall the ancient sanctity of Avalon, without regretting its altered state. English intercourse with foreigners was highly favourable to this cast of thought. Fleury on the Loire, above Orleans, had become, by Odo's efforts, in 930<sup>2</sup>, the main seat and seminary of Benedictine discipline. It was now the boast of Gaul, the talk and envy of religious Europe. Its glory, probably, was known to Dunstan, when taken by his father to spend a night at Glastonbury, whither he seems chiefly to have gone for the satisfaction of praying on a spot so highly famed for sanctity. But Herstan would naturally draw his interesting boy's attention to the various claims upon popular veneration that Avalon presented. A mental eye, fixed on the kindling imagination of thoughtful childhood, will readily discern young Dunstan's eager and delighted survey of the ancient church—the still solitude around—the devotees from distant Ireland. Impressions, deeply made in the early spring of life, are prolific in visions awaiting manhood for accomplishment of Arthur, and from the veneration for Glastonbury that was so widely and deeply spread. Hence we may reasonably conjecture that the Isle of Avalon contained the earliest British establishment for the accommodation of Christian ministers.

---

<sup>1</sup> After the burning of the church, in 1184, Henry de Sully, then abbot, was recommended to search for the remains of Arthur between two stone pillars, ornamented with carved work. At a great depth was found a coffin, containing bones and a leaden cross, the latter thus inscribed:—Hic jacet sepultus inclitus Rex Arthurus in insulâ Avalloniâ. The cross was afterwards preserved in the treasury.—USSER. Brit. Eccl. Antiq. 62, 272.

<sup>2</sup> MABILLON. Annal. Bened. iii. 400.

ment. Of such enchanting prospects Dunstan had his fill on retiring for the night. His muscular energies were locked in sleep; but a rich fancy highly stimulated, and a mind teeming with projects for the future, defied bodily fatigue. Before him rose an aged figure, clothed in white, who led him, majestically, about the very spots that had absorbed his interest while awake. They were not, however, now, mere open spaces, with here and there, perhaps, a remnant of hoar antiquity. A splendid monastic pile gave them the dignity for which they had seemed long to call. Partial credulity was fain to represent this bright creation of a poetic brain, as the very prototype of that imposing structure which Dunstan's influence eventually raised<sup>1</sup>. But the dreams, even of adult, informed, and accurate minds, usually want precision. The crude conceptions of a slumbering child must ever be confused, indistinct, and, in detail, impracticable.

Dunstan's early predilections for Glastonbury were confirmed by his education there. The pilgrims who sought Avalon from Ireland, finding no establishment, were wholly thrown upon their own resources, and tuition was their ordinary refuge<sup>2</sup>. Among this band of learned strangers Herstan selected an instructor for his intellectual boy. As the youthful student advanced in age, he rapidly realized the promise of his infancy, leaving the proficiency of every equal very far behind. But no talent will become thus effective without close application:

---

<sup>1</sup> "Eo scilicet ordine quo nunc statuta referuntur fore demonstrantem."—Cleop. B. 13. f. 61.

<sup>2</sup> "Cum ergo hi tales viri talibus de causis Glastoniam venissent, nec tamen quicquid sibi necessarium erat sufficientissimè in loco reperissent, suscipiunt filios nobilium liberalibus studiis inbuedos."—OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 92.

Dunstan's thirst of knowledge seems, accordingly, to have undermined his health. A violent fever seized him, and delirious transports, of long continuance, overclouded the hopes of his doting parents with anguish and despair. As a last resort, they sought assistance from a female, famed for skill in medicine. Under her treatment Dunstan's illness became daily more alarming, and at length he sank upon his couch to all appearance dead. As such, indeed, he seems to have been abandoned. He was, however, only labouring under complete exhaustion. Hence his bodily energies, after a short interval, were sufficiently recruited. He then sprang from bed, seized a club, accidentally at hand, and wildly rushed abroad, panic-stricken by the fancied baying of savage hounds, that morbidly tingled in his ears. He long fled in horror before this imaginary chase, alike regardless of hill and dale. But as the sun declined, his frenzy felt again the sedative influence of lassitude. Half unconsciously, perhaps, he then turned his weary steps towards Glastonbury, and reached its venerable fane<sup>1</sup>. A new terror seems now to have assaulted him, which tasked every faculty once more. He placed his foot in some steps provided for workmen

---

<sup>1</sup> This incident is cautiously introduced by ut ferunt, in the contemporary life of Dunstan. It is, however, far from improbable; and its age, accordingly, appeared a sufficient warrant for its insertion. All these very natural particulars of Dunstan's illness are most absurdly exaggerated, and indeed, caricatured, by Osbern, who has made them vehicles for introducing what he, probably, considered a very pious and sublime machinery of angels and devils. An opportunity of thus comparing more modern representations with their ancient originals, is interesting and important. It tends to show that Romish peculiarities, deemed objectionable by Protestants, are not the most ancient parts of the system, but that, in fact, antiquity is much more completely on the anti-papal side than superficial observers imagine.

employed on a repair, mounted to the church's roof, and paced madly to and fro along its dangerous height. After a time his eye rested upon an aperture, and through it he pushed his way. It led into the church, though by a dangerous descent. Nothing, could, however, stop his heedless frenzy; and he came safely down. He now found two guards fast asleep. Without making any noise he lay down between them, and sank exhausted into a most refreshing slumber. When morning broke, the men were astonished on finding their companion, especially when they thought upon the peril that he must have undergone to reach them<sup>1</sup>. Dunstan's disorder was now spent. Yesterday's excitement and fatigue having, eventually, plunged him in a sound and healthy sleep, had purged his morbid powers away. He remained master of himself, and youth soon repaired all the ravages of his late disease. A warning, however, so severe, could not fail of making a permanent impression on a mind so versatile and vigorous. Every thing, too, that he had undergone, must have augmented veneration for the Isle of Avalon.

His pious disposition and studious habits naturally inclined him to the sacred profession. He was, accordingly, tonsured, and admitted into inferior orders, with full approbation of his parents. He then retired to his favourite Glastonbury, and lived as a religious recluse<sup>2</sup>. His mind, however, was too energetic, and his talents too diversified, for the mere monotony of ascetic observances. Hence he not only continued a diligent and multifarious reader, but also he found relief from the severity of intellectual exertion by application to music and mechanics<sup>1</sup>. In both he soon excelled. His mastery over the harp attracted general admiration, and the fame of his mechanical skill yet survives in some of those tales that monkish credulity eventually circulated as an honour to his memory, and which are so ludicrous as to defy popular oblivion.

<sup>1</sup> Cleop. B. 13. f. 62.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. | ii. 93. MALMESB. Script. post

Bed. 145.

An individual so highly recommended by virtue, ability, and attainments, will generally make his way to the abodes of greatness, even from a humble rank; but Dunstan had no such obstacle to surmount. His family was noble, and his paternal uncle was Athelm, archbishop of Canterbury. By this prelate he was introduced to Athelstan<sup>2</sup>, and that monarch soon treated him with unequivocal partiality. This flattering success appears to have altered his views. He had always been ambitious: most men are so, especially the young, and those who are conscious of commanding intellect. Dunstan's ambition, probably, had hitherto led him to calculate upon naturalizing among his countrymen a system of monachism like that attracting so much notice and applause at Fleury. New hopes and new designs, however, were awakened by success at court, and he began to build the airy castles of secular distinction. As usual, also, in youth, his mind became susceptible of female blandishment, and of a regard for personal appearance. The jealousy that often embitters relationship brought all these delightful visions to a violent and sudden termination. It was represented to his royal patron that the youthful student's piety had been grossly overrated; much of his time being really spent over the pernicious vanities of exploded heathenism, from which he sought a proficiency in magic<sup>1</sup>. Dunstan's mechanical genius had given, probably, some colour to this ridiculous charge, in the estimation of ignorant minds, and Athelstan was not proof against it. He was induced, accordingly, though with difficulty, to desire his young friend's retirement. Dunstan's enemies could not rest satisfied with mortifying him by this galling disappointment. As he mournfully bent his course away from the scene of greatness that had lately smiled so bewitchingly, they overtook him in all the wanton insolence of savage triumph, bound him hand and foot, and kicked him prostrate into a fetid, miry marsh. This inexcusable violence may have been provoked by the sufferer's haughty, overbearing temper; and his assailants, probably, defended their barbarous revenge by representing it as treatment quite good enough for a confederate with infernal powers. On the departure of his persecutors, Dunstan struggled from the noisome fen, and made for the residence of a neighbouring friend. Blackened, however, with mud, and drenched with wet, his appearance was hardly human; and the fierce dogs that watched around the gate, showed a strong determination to deny him entrance. A man-ner, at once kind and firm, having overcome their opposition, Dunstan found his way within the mansion, told his tale, and was hospitably received<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Cleop. B. 13. 63. OSBERN, ut supra. GERVAS. X. Script. 1646.

<sup>2</sup> OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 94.

MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 114. GERVAS. X. Script. 1646. BROMT Ib. 837.

Soon afterwards he visited one of his relations, Elphege the Bald, bishop of Winchester. That prelate

<sup>1</sup> "Dicentes eum ex libris salutaribus et viris peritis non salutis animæ profutura, sed avitæ gentilitatis vanissima didicisse car-mina, et histriarum colere incantationes."—Cleop. B. 13. 63.
<sup>2</sup> Ib. 64.

appears to have been deeply smitten with admiration of monachism', and he earnestly exhorted his youthful kinsman to consider late disappointments as a warning to adopt finally that monastic life which he had so happily begun at Glastonbury. But Dunstan's hope of courtly advancement, though severely checked, was far from extinguished. When Elphege, accordingly painted the magnanimity of burying worldly ambition amid the austerities of a cloister, and the immortal rewards awaiting such a sacrifice, the impatient listener answered, "Much greater self-denial is displayed by him who wears life away, professedly a secular, but careful to practise all the virtues of a monk. The habit once taken, a man has renounced his liberty; and future strictness of deportment flows not so much from choice as from necessity." Vainly did Elphege argue against the plain sense of this reply, and entreat of Dunstan to ponder the difficulty of escaping the fatal snares of concupiscence, unless completely removed from temptation<sup>2</sup>. His youthful relative heard all this eloquence in vain. He was violently in love, and his imagination wandered over delightful scenes of connubial bliss. He seems even to have found the monastic dress repulsive<sup>3</sup>; viewing it, probably, as at once the livery of odious celibacy, and a defiance to that eye for exterior grace which females

<sup>1</sup> MALMESB., Script. post Bed. 138.

<sup>2</sup> OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 95.

<sup>3</sup> "Primum enim mulierum illi injectit amorem, (diabolus sc.) quo per familiares earum amplexus mundanis oblectamentis frueretur. Interea propinquus ipsius Ælfheagus, cognomine Calvus, præsul

quoque fidelis petitionibus multus et spiritalibus monitis eum rogavit ut fieret monachus. Quod ille instinctu præfati fraudatoris renuncians, maluit sponsare juvenculam, cujus cotidie blanditiis foveretur, quam more monachorum bidentinis indui pannis."—Cleop. B. 13. 65.

usually possess. Dunstan's ancient biographer is wholly at a loss to explain this anxiety for marriage, and such aversion for the cloister, without attributing them to the temporary ascendancy of Satan. He soon has, however, the satisfaction of relating his hero's complete victory over this anti-monastic feeling. The disappointed courtier again fell dangerously sick, and his spirits were completely broken. As the fever left him, he bade farewell to love, and hastily acquainted Elphege with his fixed intention to become a monk<sup>1</sup>. The prelate was delighted; and, after a short interval, ordained him priest<sup>2</sup>. The monkish habit he seems to have taken at Fleury<sup>3</sup>, then so famed among aspirants after monastic sanctity, and even revered as the spot in which the bones of Benedict himself had, by some very questionable management, found a resting-place<sup>4</sup>.

Dunstan's high connexions and qualities of unquestionable value, easily procured him again admittance into the royal palace. Athelstan was, however, dead, and his brother Edmund had ascended his throne. To this young prince the illustrious Benedictine appears to have been appointed chaplain<sup>5</sup>. The current of his ambition was now completely changed. Henceforth it

<sup>1</sup> Cleop. B. 13. 65.

<sup>2</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 138.

<sup>3</sup> INGULPH. Ib. 496.

<sup>4</sup> EADMER. de Vitâ S. Osw. Archiep. Ebor. (Angl. Sacr. ii. 194.) "Cum in castro Cassino vasta solitudo existeret, corpus S. Benedicti ab Agilulfo monacho inde delatum est in cœnobium Floriacense, a Leopoldo abbate, nuper fundatum in Aurelianensi territorio." Of this furtive deed, however, as a pope justly styled it, Agilulfus was found to have been guiltless. In 1066, Benedict's bones were discovered in their original grave.—Propyl. Monasticon.

<sup>5</sup> "Rex autem Edmundus Dunstano sancto, hinc presbytero suo, monasterium Glasconiæ tunc in desolatione a paucis clericis occupatum, cum omnibus pertinentiis contulit restaurandum."—INGULPH. Script. post Bed. 496.

flowed steadily along the channel that early predilections had provided. Edmund built and endowed a regular monastery at Glastonbury, under the superintendence of his gifted spiritual adviser. Thus the visions of Dunstan's youth were realized. Monastic piles rose from the very soil on which the teeming imagination of his boyish days had painted them. Around himself was assembled a community of monks, emulating the regularity of Fleury. This was the first establishment of the kind ever known in England, and Dunstan was the first of English Benedictine abbots'. He was thus really the father of English monachism, a venerable institution, that long nobly patronized both arts and literature. But being inherently the nurse of idleness, fanaticism, imposture, and hypocrisy, the close ally besides, of a hostile foreign power, even thinking and honourable men desired at length its overthrow. In the wealth which ages of popularity had accumulated, concurrence was effectually secured from those mercenary spirits who view political support and every other thing within their power, as mere instruments of private gain. Thus, the extraordinary success of the system that Dunstan planted eventually brought about its ruin; and his zeal, that so many generations had admired, came to be represented as a national misfortune and disgrace. There can be no doubt, however, that Glastonbury's great abbot was able and sincere, though fanatical and ambitious. Nor can the Benedictine order be denied ton. Angl. Sacr. ii. 101, note.) "Saluberrimam S. Benedicti sequens institutionem, primus abbas Anglicæ nationis enituit."—Cleop. B. 13. 72.

<sup>1</sup> "Unde primum, eliminato quicquid oculos superni inspectoris offendebat, monachus et abbas effectus, monachorum ibi scholam primo primus instituere cœpit."—(ADELARD. Vit. Dunst. ap. Whar-

respectful consideration. It stands upon far higher ground than that heterogeneous mass of begging friars and unprofitable monks, by which the papal reign was gradually overspread.

Under Edmund was holden in London<sup>1</sup> a legislative assembly, very fully attended. In this appeared the operation of Dunstan's favourite principles, the first enactment passed being to restrain ecclesiastical persons, whether male or female, from unchastity, under pain of forfeiting their whole properties and the privilege of Christian burial<sup>2</sup>. Monks and nuns are the parties brought unequivocally under the lash of this regulation; but it is rather loosely worded, and was most probably meant as a warning to the whole sacerdotal order. It had long been a popular maxim among the stricter professors of religion, that however human laws might allow priests to marry, conscience demanded celibacy. The monastic opinions now gaining ground so fast abroad, and industriously patronized by one of the ablest heads in England, naturally gained additional repute for this ascetic view. Another of Edmund's

<sup>1</sup> The two archbishops, Odo and Wulfstan, and a large assemblage, both clerical and lay, were present: Easter was the time of year. The precise date is uncertain; but, as Edmund reigned from 941 to 946, this witena-gemot may be reasonably placed in 943, or thereabouts. The preamble calls it a great synod; but it cannot hence be necessarily inferred that the assembly was convened for ecclesiastical purposes only. Nor, indeed, does it appear certain that the very religious air worn by the preamble, in the printed editions of the councils, is contemporary. From these, Johnson thus renders the latter sentence of the preamble: "There were Odo and Wulfstan, archbishops, and many other bishops, consulting for the good of their own souls, and of those who were subject to them." Now, in the Cotton MS., although Saxon is found answering to the words printed in italics, yet it seems an addition, the hand looking different, though ancient.—Brit. Mus. Nero, A. 1. f. 88.

<sup>2</sup> LL. Eccl. Edm. R. cap. 1. SPELM. i. 420. WILK. i. 214.

constitutions enjoins the payment of tythes, church-shot, and alms-fee<sup>1</sup>. It is not easy to determine the exact nature of this last payment: hence it has been considered as identical with the plough-alms mentioned in Edward the Elder's treaty with Godrun<sup>2</sup>. Practically, the decision of such a question is of no great importance in modern times; not so the repeated legislative mention of assessments for ecclesiastical purposes, independently of tythes. From such notices, it is plain that the church-rates of after ages are not the mere creatures of some ancient unwritten prescription, but the legitimate successors of more than one formal assessment, constitutionally imposed by the national legislature. It is remarkable, however, that Edmund has not provided civil penalties against defaulters: his legislature merely sanctions their excommunication. Another of his laws enjoins every bishop to repair God's house at his own see<sup>3</sup>, and to admonish the king of due provision for churches generally. This looks

<sup>1</sup> LL. Eccl. Edm. R. cap. 2. SPELM. i. 420. WILK. i. 214.

<sup>2</sup> LL. Eccl. Edov. Sen. et Guth. ab Alur. et Guth. RR. primum conditæ, cap. 6. SPELM. i. 392. WILK. i. 203.

<sup>3</sup> There is an ellipse here, which occasions a difficulty. The Saxon stands, gebete Godes hus on his agnum; literally, better God's house on his own. The last word may be plural. Hence Spelman has "suis ipsius sumptibus." Inett does not profess to translate, but he thus paraphrases the canon: "The fifth requires the bishops to repair the churches in their own demeans and lands, and to inform the king of such others as want repairs." This appears a reasonable way of filling up the ellipse. Johnson's word, see, has however been used in the text, because the Saxon will not warrant Inett's word, churches, in the former clause. It merely says God's house in the singular. The whole canon, or law, is: Eac we cwædon thæt ælc biscop gebete Godes hus on his agnum, and eac thone cyning myndige thæt ealle Godes cyricean syn wel behofene, swa us mycel thearf is. Also we said that every bishop better God's house on his own, and also remind the king that all God's churches be well behoved, as great need is to us. Lye would translate wel behofen like another evidence that tythes were not regarded as the sole fund for maintaining public worship. In other constitutions, Edmund legislates against bloodshedding, perjury, magical arts, and violation of sanctuary.

During his brief reign, the see of Canterbury became vacant, and Odo was translated to it from Sherborne. This prelate was of Danish blood and heathen parentage; but an early conversion, by which he mortally offended all his original connexions, secured his masculine understanding for the Christian ministry<sup>1</sup>. On receiving an offer of the metropolitical chair, he is reported to have demurred, because he was not a monk, alleging that he should want a recommendation which every successor of Augustine had hitherto possessed<sup>2</sup>. Upon this allegation doubts have been cast, as there is reason to believe it untrue<sup>3</sup>; it is not certain, therefore, that Odo either took the monastic habit at Fleury<sup>4</sup>, or received it in England from the abbot, or a pro-abbot, especially constituted for the purpose, and sent over by bene ornatus. But it seems to mean a sufficient provision for necessities, the verb behofian being rendered egere, indigere.

---

From this law it has been inferred that every bishop was to keep his own church in repair, and besides, if necessary, to give such information to the king as would set him upon making other bishops do the same. "The obvious interpretation of these words would be, that the bishop was bound by the law, first to repair God's house, that is, his cathedral, and then, if he found other churches in his diocese in want of repair, to remind the king to use his authority to have them properly repaired. The law says nothing of the parties who were to be compelled by the king to repair."—HALE'S Antiquity of the Church-rate System, 28.

<sup>1</sup> OSBERN. Vita Odonis. Angl. Sacr. 78.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. 81.

<sup>3</sup> "Quod tamen a veritate alienum est: nam quosdam presbyteros fuisse supra retulimus."—(Antiqu. Britan. 115.) Mabillon disputes this, and, as usual, with considerable force.—Annal. Bened. iii. 456.

<sup>4</sup> BROMTON. X. Script. 863.

for his accommodation<sup>1</sup>: but such relations discover plainly that the monkish era had now fairly begun. To the religious records of England, Odo contributed ten canons and a synodical epistle, grave and pious compositions, very creditable to his memory. His canons claim immunity for the Church from secular impositions, urge a sense of duty upon every class, from the throne downwards, enjoin fasting, alms-giving, and the observance of religious days, especially of Sunday, and insist upon the due payment of tythes<sup>2</sup>. These venerable monuments offer no superstitious admonition; nor, although solicitous of unity for the Church, do they make any mention of a papal centre, but merely recommend Christians to become one body, by the common bond of faith, hope, and charity, under one head, Jesus Christ<sup>3</sup>. From one canon, it appears that the monkish profession was often little else than a pretence for vagrancy and idleness<sup>4</sup>. From the last, it is plain that the payment of tythes was not considered as a general release from liberality to the poor. Odo says, that men are not only to live, but also to give alms, out of the nine parts remaining after piety has had her tenth. The synodical epistle appears to

<sup>1</sup> GERVAS. X. Script. 1644. OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 82. MABILLON, ut supra.

<sup>2</sup> SPELM. i. 415. WILK. i. 212.

<sup>3</sup> Can. 8. SPELM. i. 417. WILK. i. 213.

<sup>4</sup> Can. 6. SPELM. i. 417. WILK. i. 213. Wigfrith, a visitor to Guthlac, the famous hermit of Croyland, told him that he had met with monkish impostors among the Scots. "Dicebat enim se inter Scottorum populos habitasse, et illic pseudo-anachoritas diversorum religionum simulatores vidisse."—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Nero, E. 1. f. 191.)

It might seem fair enough to charge all these impositions upon a rival party; but obviously, the monks of earlier, and the friars of later times, must have always had among them a considerable body of idle hypocrites. Odo's canon shows this to have been the case in his day.

be imperfect, but it conveys admonition in a religious, humble, and earnest strain, every way worthy of a Christian prelate<sup>1</sup>.

Among the monks living under Dunstan at Glastonbury, was a well-born native of Winchester, named Ethelwold<sup>2</sup>. He had lived at court, while his abbot was there<sup>3</sup>, took priest's orders with him from Elphege, bishop of Winchester, and cordially shared in his monastic enthusiasm. Anxiety to rival the most perfect of his order, had nearly driven Ethelwold from England, for a residence among foreign Benedictines, when Edgiva, mother of Edred, now upon the throne, conjured her son to retain a personage so holy<sup>4</sup>. Overcome by these persuasions, the king founded a monastery on a royal estate at Abingdon, and made Ethelwold its abbot. This was the second Benedictine house established in England. No exertion of its new superior was wanting to render it the parent of many others. Aware that continental monasteries excelled in reading and singing, he procured masters from Corbie, in Picardy, to instruct his own society in these attractive arts<sup>5</sup>. Doubting also, whether, even under Dunstan, there had been opportunities for a thorough acquaintance with monastic discipline, he sent Osgar, one of his monks, to Fleury for farther instruction<sup>6</sup>. Thus he secured popularity for his favourite system, by the attractions of public worship, and well-defined, rigid

<sup>1</sup> SPELM. i. 418. WILK. i. 214.

<sup>2</sup> Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Nero, E. 1. f. 416. Ethelwold's parents, we there learn, lived in the reign of Edward the Elder. Wulfstan was the author of this life.

<sup>3</sup> Ib.

<sup>4</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 139. MABILLON. Annall. Bened. iii. 483.

<sup>5</sup> Hist. Cænob. Abendon. Angl. Sacr. i. 165.

<sup>6</sup> WOLSTAN. MSS. Cotton. Nero, E. 1. f. 417.

austerity of discipline. Hence he was termed in after ages, the father of monks<sup>1</sup>. Dunstan's claims to that title might be better, but his intellect was too comprehensive, and his ordinary habits were too secular, for maturing the details which monachism required for its complete success.

It had scarcely taken root when Edred, its royal patron, prematurely died. His nephew, Edwy, a very handsome youth<sup>2</sup>, succeeded to the throne. This young prince, wearied by the coarse intemperance of his coronation day, withdrew from the festive hall into a private room. Disgusted at his absence, the carousing nobles despatched a remonstrance by Dunstan, and a relation of his, Kinsy, bishop of Lichfield. On entering, the messengers found Edwy seated sportively between his wife and mother-in-law, while the crown lay negligently upon the ground. Expostulation being found unavailing to procure the youthful king's return, a scene of violence ensued. Dunstan ended it by forcing Edwy from his seat, replacing the crown upon his head, and dragging him once more to join the offended revellers<sup>3</sup>. The whole transaction giving mortal offence both to the king and his fair connexions,

<sup>1</sup> "Pater monachorum, et sidus Anglorum."--(BROMTON. X. Script. 877.) The former of these designations appears to have been borrowed from the Saxon Chronicle, which, mentioning Ethelwold's death under the year 984, styles him muneca fæder, father of monks.

<sup>2</sup> "Præ nimiâ etenim pulchritudine Pancali sortitus est nomen."—ETHELWERD. Script. post Bed. 483.

<sup>3</sup> Cleop. B. 13. 76. The queen's name is usually written Elgiva: the contemporary life of Dunstan has it Æthelgifu. Mr. Turner (Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 252, note) may be consulted for authorities proving that this lady was Edwy's wife. She is branded as his mistress by some of the monastic writers, most probably because she was related to him within the prohibited degrees.

Dunstan was under the necessity of retiring to Glastonbury: thence he was driven soon after into exile, amidst the tears of his monks. His panegyric biography converts this natural incident into broad caricature, by contrasting the weeping community with the grinning face of Satan, whose peals of laughter were distinctly heard, as the abbot's receding steps mournfully passed along the vestibule<sup>1</sup>. By Dunstan's disgrace, the royal vengeance was not satisfied: his abbey was dissolved, as was also that of Abingdon. Thus English monachism seemed like a meteor, that brightly flashes, then immediately disappears.

But Edwy miscalculated his power. Dunstan's establishments were nurseries of fanaticism, and studiously formed from admired continental models, both powerful holds upon popular favour: the nobles, also, whose commission the exiled abbot had executed, probably regarded him as a victim in their cause, and hence justly entitled to their protection. An irresistible conspiracy, accordingly, soon secured his triumphant return from Flanders, where he had taken refuge. Nor was this humiliation all that Edwy had to undergo: his insurgent subjects raised Edgar, a younger brother, to the throne, assigning to him, as a kingdom, all England between the Humber and the Thames<sup>2</sup>: Elgiva, too, was divorced by Odo, as related to her unfortunate husband within the prohibited degrees<sup>3</sup>. With even this the archbishop was not contented:

<sup>1</sup> "Audita est in atrio templi vox plaudentis diaboli, quasi vox juvenulæ acriter atque minute cachinnantis." — OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 105.

<sup>2</sup> Cleop. B. 13. 78.

<sup>3</sup> "A.D. 958. This year Archbishop Odo separated Edwy and Elfgiva, because they were too nearly related." — Sax. Chr. 150. Dr. INGRAM'S Transl.

he branded her upon the face, and sent her away to Ireland. A short residence there healed her unsightly wounds, and she ventured upon a return into her native island. Having reached Gloucester, she was arrested, and under Odo's authority the tendons of her legs were barbarously severed<sup>1</sup>. Of this cruel mutilation she seems never to have recovered, being soon after overtaken by the hand of death. Elgiva's sufferings have effectually blasted with posterity the memory of Odo; but one age cannot safely measure the men of another by a standard of its own. The archbishop, who has long been regarded as rather a monster than a man, was known among contemporaries as Odo the Good<sup>2</sup>. His treatment of Elgiva, now ranked among the most inhuman outrages upon record, was attributed, probably, to the absolute necessity of restraining irregular passions, by occasional examples of just severity.

After a short interval, Edwy's untimely death, seemingly by violence, rendered his more fortunate brother

<sup>1</sup> OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 84.

<sup>2</sup> Ode the Good.—(MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 115.) Osbern (Angl. Sacr. ii. 86) gives this designation in a Saxon form: "Odo se gode," (se god.) The author of this compliment was Dunstan, who is said to have seen a dove in the cathedral of Canterbury, while he was celebrating mass, on Whitsunday, which, after a time, settled on Odo's tomb. This incident, which might easily have happened in a large building with many unglazed windows, was represented as a visible descent of the Holy Ghost, and an undeniable demonstration of Odo's sanctity.

Dunstan, accordingly, never subsequently passed his tomb without a reverence, nor spoke of him but as the good. This designation was readily adopted by others; and it had not worn out in popular discourse, especially at Canterbury, when Osbern wrote. Had Odo been viewed by his own age, as one unmanly outrage has made posterity view him, Dunstan's authority would not have been sufficient for thus embalming his memory.

This archbishop's name is variously written, Odo, Oda, and Ode. It seems to be the Oddy of modern English surnames.

master of all England. Upon the unhappy prince, thus cut off in the flower of his age, monkish writers have been immeasurably severe. Ethelwerd, however, a contemporary authority of high rank, assures us that he deserved his people's love<sup>1</sup>. He was evidently quite unequal to the task of curbing a society so fierce and haughty, as that which owned allegiance to his crown: but this is no very serious imputation upon the memory of a sovereign cut off in youth, and hastily embroiled with such men as Odo and Dunstan.

The latter of these two obtained episcopal honours in the beginning of Edgar's reign. Worcester was his first bishopric, and shortly afterwards he added London to it<sup>2</sup>, both sees lying in the portion of England wrested from Edwy. During that young prince's life, a more splendid ecclesiastical prize became vacant by the death of Archbishop Odo; but Canterbury was under the authority of Edwy, and by his influence Elsin, bishop of Winchester, became the new metropolitan. This

---

<sup>1</sup> "Tenuit namque quadriennio per regnum amandus."—(Script. post Bed. 483.) Edwy's death occurred in 959: that it was violent, may be inferred from probability and from the obscure language of ancient authorities. The contemporary life of Dunstan (Cleop. B. 13. f. 78) says: "Interea germanus ejusdem Eadgari, quia justa Di sui judicia deviando dereliquit, novissimum flatum miserâ morte expiravit." An old manuscript chronicler, cited by Mr. Turner (Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 275), says, however, expressly, that he was slain in Gloucestershire. Mr. Turner gives Edwin as the name of this young sovereign, and under a great weight of authority; but he is called Eadwig by the Saxon Chronicle, Ethelwerd, and the contemporary life of Dunstan.

<sup>2</sup> Dunstan was advanced to the see of Worcester in 957, and in the following year London was conferred upon him, to hold with it. The next year, being that of Edwy's death, saw his translation to Canterbury. Dunstan's monastic biographers represent that he was offered that see on the two former vacancies, but declined it. Edwy's authority would, however, be likely to prevent Dunstan from receiving any such compliment within the limits of his kingdom.

prelate, a decided enemy to their order, is charged by the monks with insulting Odo's grave, and with obtaining Canterbury by simony. He died, however, on his way to Rome, whither he was proceeding for the pall. His unexpected fate arose, it is said, from extreme cold encountered in crossing the Alps; but it is represented as a judicial visitation of offended Providence. Brithelm, bishop of Wells, was tantalised by being chosen in his room; but the necessary arrangements were incomplete on Edwy's immature decease: Canterbury, therefore, was not closed against Dunstan's ambition, and the primate-elect was compelled to relinquish his claims<sup>1</sup>. Having thus attained the highest dignity within a subject's reach, Dunstan became virtually the most powerful man in England. Edgar was, indeed, a boy of sixteen when he ascended the throne, and seems ever to have been under the influence of licentious, headstrong passions. Very rarely do such men fill important stations with any degree of credit to themselves, or of advantage to society: Edgar is, however, one of these uncommon instances. Monastic writers have naturally loaded his memory with panegyric; nor can inquirers, however unfavourable to monachism, deny that his rule was glorious and beneficial. He reigned in prosperity and peace, the admitted superior over a larger portion, perhaps, of the island than any one of his ancestors<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> OSBERN. Angl. Sacr. ii. 109. Brithelm is represented by Osbern as a good-natured man, who knew very well how to take care of himself, but who was unfit for active life. "Homo mansuetior quam industrius, et qui suæ magis quam alienæ vitæ nosset consulere." He seems to have been far from willing to relinquish Canterbury. "Jussus a rege, et omni populo, Cantuariâ discedit."—Ib.

<sup>2</sup> We secgath to sothan that se tima wæs gesælig and winsum on Angelcynne tha tha Eadgar cynincg thone Cristendom gefyrthrode, and fela munuclifa arærdc; and his cynerice wæs munigende

Under so much good fortune, he attested his exultation with pardonable vanity, by titles, borrowed seemingly from the imperial court of Constantinople<sup>1</sup>. To Dunstan, probably, Edgar was largely indebted for his enviable position<sup>2</sup>. The royal councils were directed chiefly by a man of extraordinary talent: whose mind, indeed, might be rather warped upon monastic questions; but its ordinary produce was an enviable succession of views, clear, sound, comprehensive, and decided.

After a reign over all England of about two years, Edgar found his people oppressed by a calamity that no human wisdom could assuage. A dreadful pestilence raged, especially in London<sup>3</sup>. As usual in such seasons, divine justice and human iniquity were anxiously contrasted in the public mind. Advantage was taken of on sibbe, swa that man ne gehyrde gif ænig scyphere wære buton a-genre leode the this land heoldon: and ealle tha cyningas the on thysum iglande wæron, Cumera and Scotta, comon to Eadgare, hwilon anes dæges eahta cyningas, and hi ealle gebugon on Eadgares wis-sunge.—(Hom. in S. Swithun. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton. Julius, E. 7. f. 101.) We truly say that the time was happy and joyous in the English nation when King Eadgar furthered Christianity, and reared many monks' livings: and his reign continued in peace, so that no fleet was heud of, but of on's own people who hold this land: and all the kings who were in this island, Cumbrians and Scots, came to Eadgar; once in one day eight kings, and these all bowed to Eadgar's direction. The eight kings meant, are, Kenneth of Scotland,

Malcolm of Cumbria, Macchus of Anglesey, three from Wales, and two others more difficult of identification.—See TURNER'S Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 265.

<sup>1</sup> "Ego, Edgarus, totius Albionis basileus, nec non maritimorum seu insulanorum regum circum habitantium."—(MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 32.) "Ego, Edgarus, totius Albionis monarcha."—INGULPH. Ib. 502.

<sup>2</sup> "Afflaverat profecto cor regis divinitatis specie (Dunst. sc.), ut ejus consilium susciperet in omnibus incuntanter faciens quæcunque Pontifex jubenda putaret. Ille quoque quicquid famæ et salutis regis concinnum esse intelligeret, non omittere, differentem acrius urgere."—MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 115.

<sup>3</sup> In the year 961.—Sax. Chr. 153.

these wholesome feelings to urge a plea in behalf of the Church: the needy and avaricious, disregarding conscience and the feeble sanctions of law, had commonly failed in the faithful discharge of tythes and other ecclesiastical dues. Their case was now represented as analogous to that of tenants failing in their payments to landowners. Men were exhorted to consider the little indulgence usually shown to such defaulters, and to ask themselves, whether corresponding failures were likely to be excused by God; his vengeance rather might be justly feared by those who should fraudulently withhold that share from the provision for his service, which had been imposed upon them alike by law and conscience. Arguments of this kind appear to have prevailed in two legislative assemblies, the former of which was holden at Andover, then a royal domain. The rights of religion were now statutely protected by civil penalties; and thus was established a principle of imposing ecclesiastical rent-charges upon land, recoverable by the ordinary processes of law: no specific penalty, however, was provided, a discretionary power merely being given to the royal officers, which they were strictly enjoined to exercise for the punishment of defaulters<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> See the document at the end. This venerable piece is bound up in the midst of an ancient MS. volume in the British Museum, chiefly occupied by the lives of saints. This position may be the chief reason why it seems to have been hitherto overlooked. It is, entitled in a hand, perhaps, of James the First's time, Carta Saxonica tempore Regis Edgari. The piece itself is probably coeval with the latter assembly recorded in it, and may not unreasonably be considered as a sort of proclamation, or authentic declaration, of certain legislative enactments despatched to some principal ecclesiastical establishment. It is followed by a similar exposition of enactments relating to affairs merely temporal. In the catalogue these documents are thus described: Legis, sive constitutiones Eadgari Regis, quas occasione gravissimæ pestis, per totum regnum statuit observandas

In a subsequent meeting of the Saxon estates, this loose legislation was abandoned. Subtraction of tythes was now placed under cognizance of the civil and ecclesiastical authorities conjointly. The king's reeve, the bishop's, and the mass-priest entitled to recover, were to seize all the property tythable, but on which tythes had not been paid: they were to restore one-tenth of it to the defaulter, to render its tenth to the minster aggrieved, and to divide the remaining eight parts between the lord and the bishop<sup>1</sup>. This earliest of known statutes, guarding tythe-owners in the possession of their property by a definite measure of coercion, appears chargeable with unjust severity: the times, however, were lawless and rude; hence the remedies provided for social evils were naturally tinged with unsparing harshness: ecclesiastical dues, also, really require a very full measure of protection. The (Saxonice): folia bina ex libro quodam pænientiali avulsa. The MS. volume is thought to have been chiefly written about the year 1000.

<sup>1</sup> "3. And let all the tythe of young animals be paid by Pentecost, and of the fruits of the earth by the Equinox: and let every church-scot be paid by Martin's mass, under pain of the full mulct; which the Doom-book mentions. And if any will not pay the tythe as we have commanded, let the king's reeve, and the bishop's reeve, and the mass-priest of the minster, go to him, and take by force the tenth part for the minster to which it belongs, and deliver to him the ninth part, and let the eight parts be divided into two; and let the lord take one-half, the bishop the other, whether it be a king's man or a thane's man."—(JOHNSON'S Transl. SPELM. i. 444. WILK. i. 245.) There are no known means of affixing a certain date to these constitutions enacted under Edgar. Spelman would assign them to the year 967, or thereabouts, as being in the middle of Edgar's reign. There can be no reasonable doubt that they are posterior to the two legislative assemblies, whose acts are recorded in the Cotton MS., and which must have been holden after the pestilence, in 961. If they had been anterior to these assemblies, an arbitrary penalty, to be inflicted by the king's reeve alone, would not probably have been provided in the latter. The constitutions long printed are evidently an improvement upon such undefined enactments.

dealer and artisan, the practitioner in law and medicine, are only controlled by competition in making terms with such as desire their commodities or aid; but the minister of God's word and sacraments enjoys no such advantage. All indeed, but the weak and worthless, freely concede importance to his profession. This acknowledgment, however, generally flows rather from cool, deliberate conviction, than from such feelings as maintain secular vocations. Minds fixed intently upon eternity, are alive to the value of religious ordinances: habitually, the wants and cravings of mankind incline them to regard expenditure upon piety, as that which can be most agreeably, safely, and completely retrenched. Legislation, therefore, against such a short-sighted selfishness, is equally merciful and wise. It has planted a liberal profession, and a well-governed house of God, in every corner of England. Considerable seats of wealth and population might have commanded these advantages, and undoubtedly would, without national aid; but the country generally must have wanted them, unless a competent portion of all the people's industry had been legally reserved for their maintenance: nor, unless this portion had been jealously protected, could it have permanently stood its ground against that spirit of rapacity which human corruption ever keeps in vigour. Such protection, however, having been provided, every estate inherited or acquired was burdened with a variable rent-charge, reserved as the patrimony of religion. Hence opulent landlords were more easily induced to found and build churches upon their several properties. Nor usually did an endowment of glebe satisfy their pious liberality: in many cases, probably in all, they attested solemnly their individual approval of existing laws, by settling the tythes of their lands upon their new establishments. Thus English parochial churches, in themselves private foundations, can allege claims of two several kinds upon the properties around. Not only can they plead immemorial usage, and penal statutes of high antiquity, but also legal surrenders by very distant proprietors, confirmatory of such usage, and formally assenting to such statutes.

From another of Edgar's ecclesiastical laws, it is plain that the foundation of rural churches was in steady progress. The liberality of public bodies, however, seems to have lagged behind that of individuals. A founder was restrained from settling upon his church any more than a third of the tythes paid by its congregation: unless, indeed, it possessed a cemetery, every portion of the sacred tenth was denied. In such cases, it was probably considered rather as a private chapel: the proprietor, accordingly, was to maintain his priest out of the nine parts. Under no circumstance, however, does a thane appear to have been encouraged in providing religious instruction for his tenantry, by any transfer of the church-shot. The ancient minsters, immemorially entitled to it, might seem hitherto to have relaxed nothing from their claims upon this payment<sup>1</sup>:

---

<sup>1</sup> "2. If there be any thane who hath, on land which he holds by written deed, a church with a burying-place belonging to it, let him pay the third part of his tythes into his own church. If he hath a church with no burying-place belonging to it, let him give his priest what he will out of the nine parts; and let every church-scot go into the ancient minster from all the ground of freemen."—(JOHNSON'S Transl. SPELM. i. 444. WILK. i. 245.) Perhaps it is doubtful whether any distinction is intended here between tythes and church-shot. Shot properly means a payment; hence the familiar English phrase, pay the shot. If such a general interpretation of the term shot be allowable in this place, it might seem such tenacity must have acted injuriously upon the progress of parochial endowments; probably, to the great regret of pious and discerning minds. Any principle that calls for sacrifices, will gain but slowly a complete victory over individual prejudices and interests: hence the uncertainty as to parochial foundations. These have arisen from no legislative compulsion, but from the liberality of individuals during many successive generations, encouraged by the gradual surrender of rights vested in anterior establishments.

But although Edgar's ecclesiastical legislation, bearing upon the Church's patrimony, is that alone which retains any practical importance, he does not owe his figure in religious history to it. Being Dunstan's passive instrument in rooting the Benedictine system, he is the hero of monastic story, and his rule really exerted a lasting influence upon English society. During his brief reign, he seems to have established no fewer than forty-eight monasteries<sup>1</sup>. Had all these been new foundations, they must have wrought striking changes in the national habits and modes of thinking; many of them, however, reared their heads amidst a considerable mass of individual suffering, and greatly to the disapprobation of a numerous party. Clergymen were driven by the hand of power, either to become monks, or to relinquish the homes and livings in which they were legally seated around a minster<sup>2</sup>. If married, the former part of this alternative must have been felt not unreasonable to suppose that private founders were allowed to endow their churches with a third of all the ecclesiastical dues arising from their estates.

---

<sup>1</sup> EADMER. de Vitâ S. Osw. Archiep. Ebor. Angl. Sacr. ii.

201. Some of these were nunneries. Bromton is not equally precise, contenting himself with reckoning Edgar's monastic establishments at more than forty.—X. Script. 868.

<sup>2</sup> "Itaque clerici multarum ecas an intolerable hardship, to which submission was almost impossible. Nor could many of those who were single, have regarded it otherwise than inexcusably tyrannical. Under pain of losing their bread, and of being branded as irreligious, they were called upon to renounce their natural liberty. Some of the abler heads among them, also, might clearly discern that ostentatious observances, and substantial holiness, are by no means inseparable companions: but such considerations operate extensively upon the higher orders alone. Inferior life is little alive to the just rights and reasonable expectations of classes above itself: the ruder intellects also are ever liable to be duped by noisy pretension. It was, accordingly, among his more considerable subjects, that Edgar's alleged reformation encountered opposition; the great majority, probably, regarded him as piously and patriotically bent upon advancing sound religion, and reforming undeniable abuses.

Dunstan was little more than the adviser of this great ecclesiastical revolution. Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, and Oswald, originally bishop of Worcester, eventually archbishop of York, were the principal agents in thus forcing a new character upon existing establishments, and in organizing Benedictine societies, in situations where no religious house had previously stood. Ethelwold had been one of Dunstan's earliest inmates at Glastonbury, and having, from the first, gained his good opinion; was recommended by him as abbot on the foundation of Abingdon. Oswald was nephew to Archbishop Odo, who placed him in a canonry at Can-clesiarum, datâ optione, aut ut amictum mutarent, aut locis valedicerent, cessère melioribus, habit- | acula vacua facientes."—MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 115.

---

terbury. There imbibing strongly the rising taste for monachism, he passed over to Fleury, and became a Benedictine. By Dunstan he was introduced to Edgar; whose influence procured his election to the see of Worcester. Immediately he fixed his mind upon converting the cathedral there into a monastery of his own order; but the canons resolutely resisted, and being supported by powerful connexions, he was unable to overcome them. This made him plant a rival house, duly supplied with monks, close to his rebellious chapter, in order that full opportunity might be given for drawing invidious comparisons between the two systems. No thought could be happier: immense congregations waited upon the monks, while the canons ministered in a church more than half deserted. Their altar, besides, lost its accustomed offerings; which were now taken to the Benedictine church. It was not long before these various causes began to operate: Wensine, an elderly canon, much respected among his brethren, first gave way. Oswald immediately sent him to Ramsey for instruction in the Benedictine discipline. As usual, example proved infectious: other canons became monks, and Wensine was quickly recalled to Worcester, as prior of the monastery which Oswald had now succeeded in substituting for his chapter<sup>1</sup>. Thus was consummated the first of these popular innovations; and, accordingly, the conversion of a secular chapter into a monastery seems to have been called at an early period, Oswald's Law<sup>2</sup>. Ethelwold, indeed, preceded innovation to 969. It appears, however, to have occupied two years from that time, before it was fully carried into effect.—(Ib. i. 546.) Edgar's charter of Oswald's

<sup>1</sup> EADMER. de Vitâ S. Osw.—Angl. Sacr. ii. 203.

<sup>2</sup> WHARTON. in Eadm. Angl. Sacr. ii. 202. Florence of Worcester, there cited, assigns Oswald's

Oswald in such an attempt upon his own cathedral of Winchester. But he could not accomplish his design until compensation was found for the parties in possession<sup>1</sup>. Of the other bishops we hear nothing, therefore they may fairly be considered as either indifferent, or hostile to the violence intended for every cathedral. But Dunstan, Ethelwold, and Oswald, formed a triumvirate, which, backed by royal authority, effectually secured a succession of triumphs for the monastic party.

This victorious progress was undoubtedly secured by a strong current of popular affection. Besides parading themselves and their system as perfect models of self-denial, monks were most ingenious and indefatigable in supplying the vulgar appetite for marvels. Churches, never hitherto famed for any miraculous pretension, had no sooner passed into monastic hands, than their

---

Law, as it is there styled, was granted in confirmation of Oswald's changes at Worcester, with the concurrence of the Saxon estates. It is printed by Spelman (i. 432), and by Wilkins (i. 239). It is remarkable, in general history, for a statement in the preamble, that Athelstan was the first of English kings to whom the whole island became subject. The notion that Oswald's Law means properly a law for ejecting married clergymen from cathedral chapters, though ancient, according to Wharton, and certainly common among scholars, appears to be erroneous. "It" must be observed, that in ancient writings, it is not Oswaldes laga, but law, which signifies a knapp or little hill, and Edgar's charter gives that name to the place where Oswald's Hundred court was to be kept."—(GIBSON'S Additions to CAMBDEN. i. 625.) The charter, though approving Oswald's proceedings, is really the grant of a hundred, but it does not name any law or low, upon which the court was to be kept. Still, there is every reason to derive its name from such a spot. Bishop Gibson remarks further, that Oswald's-law-hundred, in Worcestershire, "is not one continued tract of ground, but consists of townships scattered in all parts of the county, where the bishop or monastery of Worcester had lands at the time when King Edgar granted that charter to Oswald." (629.)

<sup>1</sup> MALMESB. de Pontiff. Script. post Bed. 139.

cemeteries were found mines of wonder-working relics<sup>1</sup>. Monasteries, unrecommended by a single promising interment, would not lie under this mortifying and prejudicial deficiency<sup>2</sup>. Some departed saint, or at least, some part of one, was diligently sought and fairly gained. At other times, it was the shameful prize of either force or fraud. From whatever source this important acquisition came, the lucky house felt neither difficulty nor scruple in extracting from it both fame and fortune. Sickly pilgrims quickly crowded around their altar, and returned home enraptured by a cure. Nor is it doubtful that, among these invalids, many found a real benefit: change of air and scene, unwonted exercise, powerful excitement, are quite enough to give temporary relief under several human ailments. It would, however, be unfair to charge indiscriminately with dishonesty, this monastic provision a very different scene. "Quamdiu enim clerici inhabitabant ecclesiam Wentanam, nulla per sanctum Swythunum Deus miracula operatus est; sed ipsis ejectis, statim miracula patrata sunt."—RUDBORNE. Angl. Sacr. i. 223.

<sup>1</sup> Ethelwold, as might be expected, led the way in making these discoveries. "In illo tempore dictus vir venerabilis Ethelwoldus, Wintoniensis episcopus, monasteriorum constructor, a rege Edgardo impetravit, ut sanctorum corpora, quæ in destructis locis jacebant in negligentia, transferre sibi liceret in ea quæ construxerat monasteria."—(BROMTON. X. Script. 868.) From this it seems likely, that Ethelwold looked out for something to attract lovers of the marvellous, whenever he established a monastery, as an integral portion of its equipments. It may seem amusing to be gravely told, that so long as the canons retained their ancient possessions in the church of Winchester, no miracles graced St. Swithin's tomb, but that the monks produced immediately

<sup>2</sup> "In the reign of Edgar, a shameful description of robbery had obtained among ecclesiastical bodies—the stealing of relics, upon a pretended divine revelation. In those days it was no uncommon practice for powerful abbeys to despoil the weaker monasteries, or to rob defenceless villages of their sainted remains, in order to increase the celebrity of their own foundations."—GORHAM'S Hist. and Antiq. of Eynesbury and St. Neot's, i. 48.

for popular credulity. Among the monks were, probably, some few who valued relics merely as a productive source of revenue; but the majority consisted of genuine fanatics. Now, such spirits have at all times, and under every circumstance, eagerly clung to miracle. Vainly for this tenacity do they live when knowledge is widely spread, or even when scoffers are abundant. Their vanity and credulity are very seldom proof against any disposition to give themselves, or their party, credit for supernatural endowments. Monastic bodies, therefore, in the tenth century, may reasonably claim indulgence from those who trace to them that particular species of religious imposture and delusion, which descended from their age uninterruptedly to the Reformation<sup>1</sup>.

It was not, however, within Dunstan's power to transfer a considerable mass of property from one order of men to another without legislative intervention. Upon this necessity, the canons menaced with ejection anxiously relied. They naturally complained of gross injustice, and their cause was espoused by a majority among persons of condition. A convocation of the national estates afforded them, therefore, a reasonable hope of defeating royal policy and popular enthusiasm. Such an assembly was yielded to their importunities<sup>2</sup>, apparently in the year 968. Winchester was the place of its meeting, and it opened most ominously for the monastic party. Edgar, indeed, with the episcopal to overspread the whole world."—Ch. Hist. Cen. x. 134.

<sup>1</sup> Fuller observes rather quaintly, but with great force and justice, "Whereas formerly corruptions came into the church at the wicket, now the broad gates were open for their entrance; monkery making way for ignorance and superstition

<sup>2</sup> Fragmenta ex aliâ Vitâ S. Dunst. autore Osberto Monacho Sæcul. 12. Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. v. 706.

triumvirate, Dunstan, Ethelwold, and Oswald, brought heavy charges against married clergymen: these were met by assurances, that all reasonable causes of complaint should be removed. Nor did an overwhelming proportion of the assembled legislators discover any disposition to carry compliance further. Edgar accordingly, began to waver<sup>1</sup>, and was upon the point of siding with his nobles, when he and Dunstan are said to have heard, repeatedly and distinctly, from a crucifix in the wall, the following words: God forbid it to be done: God forbid it to be done<sup>2</sup>. In other parts of the hall, nothing more than some unintelligible noise appears to have been perceived: enough was heard, however, to raise curiosity and awe. The mysterious murmur was now explained, and the assembly felt a divine compulsion to drive the unhappy canons from their homes. This relation appears in the monastic writers generally; but Florence of Worcester, who mentions the council, has omitted it: hence modern Romish authors are sufficiently justified in representing it as an apocryphal legend, posterior to the Conquest. Florence, however, places the council of Winchester after Edgar's death, and indeed, leaves the whole transaction in considerable obscurity<sup>3</sup>. But, independently

<sup>1</sup> Even Dunstan also is represented as shaken. Osbern makes him say, immediately before the crucifix spoke, Fateor vincere vos nolo. Ecclesiæ suæ causam Christo judici committo. Wharton prefers Capgrave's version of his alleged speech: Fateor, vinci nolo. —De Vit. S. Dunst. Angl. Sacr. ii. 112.

<sup>2</sup> Absit hoc ut fiat. Absit hoc ut fiat. The crucifix appears, from Osbern, to have been eloquent no further. The ancient MS. chronicle cited by Spelman, adds to these words the following: Judicatis benè, mutaretis non benè. It also adds, that all the assembly having fallen to the earth with alarm, the crucifix said, but again so that only Edgar and Dunstan could distinguish the words—Surgite ne expavescat; quia hodiè justitia et pax in monachis osculata sunt.

<sup>3</sup> Spelman (Conc. ii. 490,) has

of ancient authority for placing this council in 968, it is plain that some new legislative powers were, about that time, required for giving efficacy to Edgar's intentions, actually brought into operation very shortly afterwards: nor without some ingenious contrivance were the canons likely to be deserted by their powerful friends.

On Edgar's premature decease<sup>1</sup>, their claims upon humanity and justice were promptly vindicated. The intrusive monks were generally expelled by persons in authority, and the clerical victims of an oppressive, calumnious fanaticism, again took possession of their homes and properties<sup>2</sup>. A large proportion of their protectors would fain have given them the security of a prince pledged in their favour. Under Edgar's son, by his second wife, they had a reasonable prospect of this advantage: but his own will, and the prior claims of Edward, born from a former marriage, backed by Dunstan's influence, were found irresistible<sup>3</sup>. In con-collected the various printed authorities bearing upon the council of Winchester, and has added to them a citation from an ancient MS. Chronicle. From this he is led to place the council in 968; and Wharton (Angl. Sacr. ii. 112) considers him to have judged rightly: evidently he has probability with him. It is a point, however, involved in much obscurity, the councils of Winchester and Calne having been commonly confounded together. There is a declamatory speech, extolling the monks and disparaging the canons, assigned to Edgar by Ethelred.—(X. Script. 360.) The substance of this was, probably, spoken at the council of Winchester. The author of the Antiquitates Britannicæ (p. 127,) would refer it to 969. It is reprinted there, and by Spelman, Conc. i. 476.

<sup>1</sup> Edgar died in 975, at the age of thirty-two.

<sup>2</sup> "Post obitum vero Edgari status regni turbabatur, nam plures magnates, ejectis monachis, de magnis monasteriis quos rex Edgarus et Dunstanus dudum instituerant, clericos cum uxoribus reduxerunt."—Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 12. JOHAN. TINMOUTH. Hist. Aurea. Pars. 3. f. 80.

<sup>3</sup> EADMER. de Vitâ S. Dunst. Angl. Sacr. ii. 220.

ceding this point, however, the more intelligent classes had no thought of surrendering also their clergy to proscription. The kingdom was agitated, accordingly, by angry debates, loud complaints, and harassing apprehensions<sup>1</sup>. For allaying these heats a legislative assembly was convened at Calne<sup>2</sup>. This was attended by Beornhelm, a Scottish prelate of commanding eloquence, as advocate for the menaced and insulted clergy<sup>3</sup>. The monastic party thus felt itself pressed, not only by a preponderating weight of property and intelligence, but also by talents for debate, probably superior to any within its own command. Hence Dunstan was almost overpowered, when the floor suddenly gave way, and most of his auditors fell violently into a chamber underneath. Many were killed upon the spot, and others were extricated with such injuries as condemned them to suffering for life. The archbishop, and, according to some authorities, his friends also, wholly escaped, the beam under him remaining firm<sup>4</sup>. This extraordinary good fortune, interpreted as

<sup>1</sup> "Multus indè tumultus in omni angulo Angliæ factus est." —INGULPH. Script. post Bed. 506.

<sup>2</sup> In 978.—(Sax. Chr. 163.) Spelman doubts whether this council might not have been holden in the preceding year. In that year, a council was holden at Kirtlington. A third council was holden at Amesbury. This appears to have been for the purpose of completing the business broken off by the accident at Calne. But there are no decrees extant passed in any one of these three councils.

<sup>3</sup> Eadmer (ut supra) says, that the northern orator was hired upon very liberal terms: magno conductum pretio.

<sup>4</sup> The Saxon Chronicle says that Dunstan stood alone: Malmesbury says the same. On the other hand, Eadmer says, "Ubi vero Dunstanus cum suis consistebat, nulla ruina domus." John of Tinmouth also (ut supra), says, "Ubi vero cum suis—scus accubitabat, ibi nulla ruine suffusio fiebat." Obviously the suspicion of contrivance is very much weakened, if Dunstan were the only party saved from falling: so say, however, the most ancient authorities. A particular examination of the case a divine manifestation in favour of monachism, secured its triumph. Among moderns, it has commonly fastened upon Dunstan an imputation of cruelty and fraud. It might have been accidental; but accidents very opportune, especially in an age of gross ignorance, are fairly open to suspicion.

From immaturity of years, the king was not present<sup>1</sup>, and his violent death soon afterwards damped monastic hopes. He fell by the blow of an assassin, hired by his mother-in-law, who thus opened the throne for her own son's accession<sup>2</sup>. Edward's untimely fate was, therefore, owing merely to the vindictive and restless cupidity of an ambitious woman. His unfledged authority had, however, served as a rallying point for the monastic party; and accordingly he became known as the martyr. Nor were the monks tardy in discerning, that, although dead, he might advance their interest. His remains were invested with a saintly celebrity, and devotees eagerly crowded around them<sup>3</sup>. This royal youth's assassination thus afforded a share of the seed eventually so prolific in superstition. Any extensive immediate benefit, however, does not seem to have gladdened the monastic party from his brief career.

may be seen in Mr. Turner's Hist. Angl.-Sax. ii. 277.

<sup>1</sup> "Absente propter ætatem rege."—MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 34.

<sup>2</sup> Edward was assassinated at Corfe Caste, the residence of his mother-in-law Elfrida, in 978.—Sax. Chr. 163.

<sup>3</sup> As this unfortunate lad, after losing his seat, was dragged a considerable distance in the stirrups, it is probable that his corpse was very much disfigured. This might occasion it to be burnt, which we find from Lupus, cited by Hickes, was the case. The ashes were buried at Wareham. The Saxon Chronicle speaks of those who "bow on their knees before his dead bones," (164.) but makes no mention of any miracles wrought. These, however, as might be expected, had arrived in full force before Malmesbury's time.—Script. post Bed. 34.

Domestic rivalry soon became, indeed, unequal to the full command of popular attention, for Scandinavia poured again her pirates over England. But materials were provided in the controversy between monks and canons for poisoning every considerable respite, and thus of undermining the Anglo-Saxon state. Hence, this unhappy strife may fairly be considered as a cause of that national decrepitude which allowed a temporary ascendancy to Denmark, and eventually gave the Normans a secure establishment.

Under Ethelred, ignominiously known as the Unready, opened early a protracted series of harassing and disgraceful scenes<sup>1</sup>. In the year following his half-brother's assassination, Dunstan crowned the young king, then only eleven years old, at Kingston<sup>2</sup>. The archbishop is said to have predicted that the sword having placed a diadem on his brow, would infallibly give him a miserable reign<sup>3</sup>. He probably saw too plainly the dangers of domestic dissension, and a fearful storm gathering in the north. Even such an intellect as his own might prove unequal to disarm the evils provoked by a hasty and unjust attack upon established rights and institutions. But his age now forced attention steadily upon the grave. Ethelred, also, was a mere child, and probably one in whom his discerning eye could rest upon little that was promising. There

---

<sup>1</sup> The pirates of Scandinavia recommenced their descents upon England in 980.—(Sax. Chr. 165.) Unready means ill-advised or unprovided with a plan. The Saxon word ræd is equivalent to counsel, evidently a Norman importation. Ethelred means noble counsel. The Unready seems to have been a derisory pun, very naturally suggested by the glaring contrast between the name and the administration of this most incompetent prince.

<sup>2</sup> In 979.—Sax. Chr. 164.

<sup>3</sup> INGULPH. Script. post Bed. 506.

is no occasion, therefore, to doubt Dunstan's prediction of an unhappy reign, or to believe, with his monkish biographers, that he spoke from inspiration. He lived to see his apprehensions considerably realised, but died before the king had attained complete maturity<sup>1</sup>. In spite of all that monkish eulogists have done to render him ridiculous, his whole history proves him to have possessed uncommon talents. His prominence in monastic history may rather, perhaps, be regretted by many who feel a jealous interest in English records of departed genius. But although Dunstan originally moulded national fanaticism after Benedict, it should not be forgotten that others chiefly lent activity for the details of his ill-advised innovation. Nor does he seem chargeable with making that provision for popular credulity which the complete success of monachism demanded. Ethelwold and Oswald were the ejectors of canons; and the former of these prelates was the indefatigable rifler of tombs with saintly names. Around Dunstan's own cathedral of Canterbury the canons remained in possession of their homes<sup>2</sup>. This <sup>1</sup> Dunstan died in 988.—(Sax. Chr. 167.) Ethelred was then about twenty. Osbern makes the archbishop to have died at the age of seventy, or thereabouts. But this is inconsistent with the statement, made by himself and others, that Dunstan was born under Athelstan. In this case he could not have been more than sixty-four. The inaccuracy, however, is probably in the time assigned to his birth, not in the age ascribed to him.

<sup>2</sup> They were not disturbed until 1005, seventeen years, namely, after Dunstan's death.—

(X. Script. 1780.) Ælfric, then archbishop of Canterbury, obtained authority from Ethelred and his legislature for this innovation: a copy of the instrument is preserved among the Cotton MSS. (Claudius, A. 3. f. 3), and this is printed by Spelman (i. 504) and by Wilkins (i. 282). The intrusive monks, however, did not long maintain their ground, and it was reserved for Lanfranc, in 1074, to accomplish that expulsion of the dean and chapter which continued to the Reformation.—WHARTON. Angl. Sacr. i. 135.

personal inactivity wears rather the appearance of selfish policy, but it affords, undoubtedly, a presumption that Dunstan's strength of mind raised him somewhat above the injustice and illusion which his favourite project naturally produced. A more unequivocal display of his intellectual vigour, and independence likewise, was his excommunication of a very powerful earl who had contracted an incestuous marriage. The offender, finding royal interference ineffectual, sent agents well supplied with money to Rome; the pope was won over, and wrote a letter, commanding and entreating Dunstan to grant the desired absolution. This was, however, positively refused until the sin had been forsaken, whoever might sue for such indulgence, and whatever danger might hang upon denying it'. A reply so insubordinate may surprise those who loosely consider the Church of England identical in liberis parebo. Sed ut ipse in peccato suo jaceat, et immunis ab ecclesiasticâ disciplinâ nobis insultet, et exinde gaudeat; nolit Deus. Avertat etiam Deus a me, ut ego causâ alicujus mortalis hominis, vel pro redemptione capitis mei, postponam legem quam servandam statuit in suâ Ecclesiâ idem Dominus meus, Jesus Christus, Filius Dei."—(SURIUS. De Probatis SS. Historiis. Colon. Agrip. 1572, tom. 3, p. 323.) Baronius, naturally scandalized by this relation, places the following gloss between the pope's mandate and Dunstan's reply: "Sed si pœnitens peccatum relinqueret voluit mandatum intelligi; nec enim alter potuit intellexisse."—(Annal. Eccl. Luc. 1744, tom. 16, p. 203.) But this is merely a gratuitous inference.

<sup>1</sup> "Tunc ille seipso deterior immani est furore correptus, et nihil eorum quæ possidebat alicujus esse momenti reputans, ad hoc solum se totum studebat impendere, ut Dunstano excitaret scandalum, et Christianæ legis jugum, quo a suâ libidine coerceretur, sibi faceret alienum. Legatos itaque suos Romam destinavit, et talibus assueta quorundam Romanorum corda et ora in suam causam largo munere, largiori sponcione, permutat. Quid inde? Præsul apostolicæ sedis Dunstano peccatori homini condescendere, verbis ac literis mandat, et eum Ecclesiæ gremio integrè conciliare monet, hortatur, imperat. Ad quæ Dunstanus ita respondet, Equidem cum illum de quo agitur, sui delicti pœnitentiam gerere videro, præceptis domini Papæ

principles from Augustine to the Reformation. But Anglo-Saxon times knew nothing of papal jurisdiction. A close and deferential connexion with Rome was indeed assiduously cultivated. Authority for domestic purposes rested exclusively at home. Edgar, accordingly, though Dunstan's obsequious tool, and the cornerstone of English monachism, asserted expressly the royal supremacy, styling himself the Vicar of Christ<sup>1</sup>.

Extant literary remains bearing Dunstan's name, are monastic rules, and a body of penitential canons. These latter, which probably were at least compiled under his inspection, condemn a married person, ordained on the dismissal of his wife, and afterwards returning to cohabitation with her, to the same penance as a murderer<sup>2</sup>. The archbishop was buried in his cathedral at Canterbury; but Glastonbury pined under such a loss of honour and emolument. A tale was, therefore, set afloat, which made Dunstan's relics, like those of Benedict himself, to have been furtively removed. Their real resting-place, pilgrims were assured, was within his own loved isle of Avalon<sup>3</sup>. Vainly did ut putamus, inter vos conversi, prædicant antiquos patres vestros fures fuisse et latrones, et quod nequius est, etiam sacrilegos; idque illorum prædicandi laudi sacribunt, quod tales fuerunt, fortassis et eadem voluntate debriati, non perpendentes quod divinâ intonat paginâ. Fures, sc. et latrones, regnum Dei non possessuros."—(EADMER. Epist. ad Glastonienses de Corp. S. Dunst. Angl. Sacr. ii. 222.) The legend invented for detailing the alleged abstraction of Dunstan's remains from Canterbury, while that city lay ruined by the Danes, is very the monks of Canterbury show his tomb, and defy their western rivals to prove its violation. For this a time was found in the darkest period of Danish anarchy, and superstitious devotees were satisfied. At length augmented attractions were announced, in a new shrine of unusual splendour, for Dunstan's mortal spoils. The cool, strong sense of Archbishop Warham revolted against such an abuse of popular credulity, and he desired his famed predecessor's coffin to be examined. In it were found a skeleton, with other corresponding fragments, proving incontestably that the first and greatest of English Benedictine abbots had been respected in his grave<sup>1</sup>. This discovery might mortify the monks of Glastonbury: their cupidity was proof against it. The abbot's reply to Warham expresses an apprehension lest, in damping the ardour which drew so many pilgrims to his house, he should incur Gamaliel's imputation of fighting against God<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> "Vitorum cuneos Canonicorum e diversis nostri regiminis cœnobiis Christi Vicarius eliminavi."—Monach. Hydens. LL. sub Edg. data. cap. 8. SPELM. i. 438. WILK. i. 242.

<sup>2</sup> 40. "If a mass-priest, or monk, or deacon, had a lawful wife before he was ordained, and dismisses her and takes orders, and then receives her again by lying with her, let every one of them fast as for murder, and vehemently lament it."—JOHNSON'S Transl. Canones sub Edg. R. cap. 31. SPELM. i. 465. WILK. i. 233.

<sup>3</sup> "Quidam ex vestris, noviter,

In 1008, Ethelred held a legislative assembly at Eanham, probably the modern Ensham in Oxfordshire<sup>3</sup>.

circumstantial, and may be seen in D'Achery and Mabillon's Collection. Transl. S. Dunst. in Monast. Glaston. Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. v. 713.

<sup>1</sup> Scrutinium factum circa feretrum beatissimi patris, Dunstani Archiep. ex mandato reverendissimi patris ac Domini, Willelmi Warham, Cant. Archiep. et Domini Thomæ Goldston, sacræ paginæ Prof. ejusd. eccl. Prioris digniss. A.D. 1508. Die 22. Ap.—Angl. Sacr. ii. 227.

<sup>2</sup> Acts v. 39. Epist. Abbat. Glaston. Ib. 231.

<sup>3</sup> The date of this witena-gemot has been considered as not exactly ascertainable. Spelman refers it to about 1009, that year being at some distance both from 1006, when Elphege was translated to Canterbury, and 1013, when he was murdered by the Danes. Among the Cottonian MSS., however, in the British Museum (Nero, A. 1. f. 90), the proceedings at Eanham are thus headed: IN NOMINE DÑI—AÑO NĪC INCARN· M. VIII. Now, we learn from the Saxon Chronicle (p. 181), that Elphege went to Rome for his pall in 1007, and that Ethelred gave orders that all landowners should provide either ships, or armour, according to the magni-

It was very numerously attended<sup>1</sup>, and it enacted laws for a general armament, both naval and military<sup>2</sup>. Among its ecclesiastical sanctions is a particular statement of dues, claimable by the Church, but without any penal provision to enforce them. They stand thus: plough-alms to be paid within fifteen nights after Easter, tythe of young by Whitsuntide; of the earth's produce at All-hallows, Rome-fee at St. Peter's mass, and light-shot thrice in a year. Soul-shot was to be paid on the opening of a grave; and in case of interment without the district in which the deceased had regularly gone to confession, the minster of that district was, nevertheless, to claim soul-shot. This ancient enactment is an obvious authority for the burial-fees, often claimed within their own parishes, from the relatives of parties interred without them. The Eanham legislators also forbade strictly, marketing and popular meetings, on Sunday; enjoined festivals in commemoration of the blessed Virgin and the Apostles; and instituted a solemn anniversary on the day of the late king's assastudes of their several estates, in 1008. The king could make no such order without legislative authority: this was, most probably, obtained at Eanham.

<sup>1</sup> "Universi Anglorum optimates."—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Claudius, A. 3. f. 30.) This MS., which is in large octavo, excellently preserved, appears to be that which Sir Henry Spelman used in preparing his edition of the Councils. In the Cottonian MS., cited in the last note, which seems to have been more generally overlooked, the preamble to the proceedings stands thus: This is seo gerædnes the Engla cyng, and ægther gehadode, gelæwede witan gecuran and geræddan. This is the enactment which the king of the Angles, and both the ordained, and the lay senators, chose and enacted. At the top of the page is written in a hand of considerable age: "An act of parliament, as ytt were." Afterwards, we find in the same hand: "This is not in print."

<sup>2</sup> "A man possessed of 310 hides, to provide one galley, or skiff; and a man possessed of 8 hides only, to find a helmet and breastplate."—Sax. Chr. Dr. INGRAM'S Transl. p. 181. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Claudius, A. 3. f. 32.

sination<sup>1</sup>. This last enactment is a proof of successful activity in the monastic party. No pains were spared,

<sup>1</sup> Gelæste man Godes gerihta georne, æghwylce geare: Thæt is, Sulh-ælmessan xv. niht on ufan Eastran, and Geogoth-teothunge be Pentecosten, and Eorth-wæstma be Ealra-halgena-mæssan, and Rom-feoh be Petres-mæssan, and Leoht-gescot thrinwa on geare, and Saul-sceat is rihtast thæt man symle gelæste æt openum græfe, and gif man ænig lic of riht scrift-scire elles-hwar lecge, gelæste man Saul-sceat swa theh into tham mynstre the hit to hyrde: and ealle Godes gerihta wyrthigeman georne, eal swa thearf is: and freolsa and fæstena healde man rihtlice, Sunnan-dæges freols healde man georne swa thær to gebyrige, and cypinga, and folc-gemota, on tham halgan dæge geswice man georne, and scē Marian freols-tida ealle weorthie man georne, ærest mid fæstene, and sythan mid freolse, and to æghwilces Apostoles heah-tide fæste man and freolsige, buton to Philippus and Jacobus freolse ne beode we nan fæsten, for tham Eastorlican freolse. Elles othre freolsa and fæstena healde man georne, swa swa tha heoldan the the best heoldan. And scē Eadwerdes mæsse-dæg witan habban gecoren that man freolsian sceal ofer eal Engla land, on kl. Aprilis. And fæstan ælce Frige-dæg, butan hit freols sy. Ordal and athas syndan tocwethen freols dagum, and riht ymber dagum, and fram Adventum Dni oth octabas Epiphanie, and fram Septuagesimam oth xv. ofer Eastran. Beo tham halgan tidan eal swa hit riht is, eallum Cristenum mannum sib and som gemæne, and ælc sacu getwæmed.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Nero, A. 1. f. 91.) Let God's rights be paid earnestly every year: that is, plough-alms fifteen nights over Easter, and tythe of young by Pentecost, and fruits of the earth by All-hallows' mass, and Rome-fee by Petre's mass, and light-shot thrice in a year, and soul-shot it is rightest that a man ever pay at open grave; and if a corpse be laid elsewhere out of its right shrift-shire, let soul-shot be paid nevertheless into the minster which had the pastorage of it: and let all God's rights be earnestly respected, even as it is needful, and let feasts and fasts be rightly holden. Let Sunday's feast be holden earnestly, even as it thereto belongeth; and let marketings and folk-motes be earnestly avoided on that holy-day: and let all St. Maria's festival tides be earnestly observed, erst with fast, and then with feast; and to each Apostle's high tide let there be a fast and feast; but to Philippus and Jacobus' feast, we bid no fast, on account of the Easter feast. Else let other feasts and fasts be earnestly holden, even as those hold who hold them best. And St. Eadwerd's mass-day the senators have chosen to be made a feast over all the land of the Angles, on kal. Aprilis. And fast every Friday, unless it be a feast. Ordal and oaths are forbidden on feast-days and right ember days; and from Adventum Domini until Octabas Epiphanie, and from Septuagesimam until xv. over Easter. In the holy tides, even as it right is, let peace and concord probably, to spread a belief, that, among national transgressions, now so severely visited, few had cried more loudly for vengeance than the murder of an innocent, well-disposed king. Such a topic might be easily so urged as to cast a shade of obloquy upon the persevering resistance of great men to a complete monastic triumph. Elphege, archbishop of Canterbury, eventually a victim to Danish violence<sup>1</sup>, appeared at the head of his own order, in this meeting of the Saxon estates. In it, however, the services rendered by himself and the Archbishop of York were not merely deliberative: besides these, the two prelates communicated, to a crowd of people in attendance, such things as had been enacted, in the shape of an exhortation to obedience. Probably this was deemed a publication of these legislative acts, and was the usual practice<sup>2</sup>. This admonitory communication also urges the duty of building churches, in be common to all Christian men, and let every strife be laid aside.

Spelman's copy of the Eanham enactments (Conc. i. 517) mentions church-shot besides light-shot, takes no notice of St. Edward's day, and exhibits other variations. Johnson translates from this; and he observes, from the reservation of tythes until All-hallows, that corn tythes must have been paid in the grain.

<sup>1</sup> Elphege being taken prisoner on the capture of Canterbury by the Danes, had the offer of ransoming his life upon extravagant terms. He refused, and being felled with bones, and other hard substances, he received his death-blow from a battle-axe.—(Sax. Chr. 189. OSBERN. de Vit. S. Elph. Angl. Sacr. ii. 140.) Lanfranc denied him to be a true martyr, saying that he lost his life, "not for the confession of Christ's name, but because he would not redeem himself for money."—Angl. Sacr. 134, note.

<sup>2</sup> "Post hæc igitur archipontifices predicti convocata plebis multitudine collecte, regis edicto supradicti, omniumque consensu catholicorum, omnibus communiter predicabant."—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Claudius, A. 3. f. 31.) The preaching begins with an exhortation to a right faith in the Trinity, proceeds to declaim against heathenism, and gradually unfolds a mass of sanctions, ecclesiastical as well as civil. Among the latter appear penalties against neglect of the naval and military armaments enacted.

all parts of the country<sup>1</sup>. For such a charge, it is most likely that the metropolitans had legislative sanction. It was one of those harassing and calamitous times, in which men earnestly think of propitiating the favour of heaven. Obviously, however, that healthy tone of national morality, which has the promise of divine approbation, will arise from nothing so certainly, as from sufficient provision for a people's religious wants. In modern times, this archiepiscopal recommendation is chiefly worthy of attention, because it furnishes one, among the multitude of proofs, that our parochial churches are not national foundations, but the gradual fruits of individual liberality.

Men's anxiety to propitiate the wrath of heaven, by a strict attention to every Christian duty, was further attested in a legislative assembly holden at Haba, a place not identified<sup>2</sup>. It was there enacted, that a penny, either in money or in kind, should be rendered for every plough-land, and that the same sum should be paid by every member of a congregation<sup>3</sup>. This may be

<sup>1</sup> "Ecclesias namque per loca singula edificate, in Dñi subsidio cunctipotentis, nec non et regis terreni."—(Brit. Mus. MSS Cotton, Claudius, A. 3. f. 31.)

<sup>2</sup> Otherwise Bada (WILK. i. 295). It appears to have been so written in a MS. formerly belonging to the monastery of St. Augustine, at Canterbury. These enactments are undated; but Johnson refers them to 1014, when Ethelred had returned from Normandy, where he and his queen had taken refuge, and when he was promising the correction of his errors in administration.

<sup>3</sup> Hirmanus. "The priest's hirman, or hyreman, was what we call a parishioner."—(JOHNSON.) This writer conjectures, that the penny imposed upon plough-lands, in the former part of the clause, is not the old plough-alms, but an extraordinary benevolence, granted under the horror of Danish invasion. The Anglo-Saxon penny, it should be remembered, was equivalent to our threepence, to say nothing of alteration in the value of money.

considered, probably, a statutable authority for Easter offerings. Another section earnestly enjoins an exact payment of church-shot and tythes. From this we learn, that the mode of tything was to surrender the produce of every tenth acre, as the plough went<sup>1</sup>. Other sections enforce, in general terms, a faithful discharge of all the Church's claims<sup>2</sup>; and one of them confirms established penalties for default<sup>3</sup>; a solemn fast of three days, also, is instituted before the feast of St. Michael<sup>4</sup>,

<sup>1</sup> Cap. 4. SPELM. i. 531. WILK. i. 295.

<sup>2</sup> These are thus enumerated in a MS. which must be about this age, as it is posterior to Dunstan, who is mentioned in f. 30. Ærest sulh-ælmessan xv. niht ofer Eastran, gegothe-teothunge be Pentecosten, Rom-fcoþ be Petres-mæssan, eorh-wæstma be Ealra-halgena-mæssan, cyric-sceat to Martinus-mæssan, and leoht-gesceotu thriwa on geave; ærest on Easter-efen, and othre sithe on Candelmasse-efen, thriddan sithe on Ealra-halgena-mæsse efen.—(Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii, 121, f. 55.) Erst, plough-alkms xv. nights over Easter, tythe of young by Pentecost, Rome-fee by Petre's mass, fruits of the earth by All-hallows' mass, church-shot at Martinus' mass, and light-shot thrice in a year; erst, on Easter-eve, and another time on Candlemas-eve, and the third time on All-hallows' mass-eve. Of these dues the clergy were solemnly to remind their congregations, at stated times. Riht is that preostas folc mynegian that hi Gode don sculon to gerihum on teothungum, and on othrum thingum.

Riht is that man thisses mynegie to Eastrum, othre sithe to gang-dagum, thriddan sithe to Middan-sumera, thonne bih mæst folces gegaderod.—Ib. ff. 54, 55.

Right is that priests remind folk that they do what is right to God, in tythes and in other things.

Right is that men be reminded of this at Easter, another time at the gang-days (Rogation days), a third time at Midsummer, when most folk is gathered.

<sup>3</sup> Cap. 7. SPELM. i. 532. WILK. i. 295.

<sup>4</sup> "While Apulia was infested by northern invaders, the Christians there obtained a signal victory, and were made to believe that this was done by the assistance of St. Michael, whose help they had invoked by three days' fasting and humiliation. There can be no doubt but that the fast here enjoined was in imitation of that of Italy. But it is observable, that there were in this age two Michaelmas days in the year; for a church was erected to this angel in Mount Garganus, where he was believed to have appeared, and to have obtained a victory for the Christians. The foundation of this church was laid on the and the people are urgently reminded of their duties, both religious and moral. The reason expressly given for all this earnest exhortation, is the pressing necessity for God's blessing to secure victory and peace. Thus a whole nation was driven, by the force of overwhelming calamity, into that enviable disposition for serious thought, which individuals display when anguish weighs their spirits down, or death is before their eyes. At such a time, the spiritual profession appears in all its real value. Hitherto, perhaps, little occasion had been felt for any other than worldly callings; but new wants now crowd upon the mind, and men provide for the service of God, as if they deeply desired his honour and the welfare of their fellows. Ordinarily religion pleads in vain for that liberal care which the best interests of society really demand<sup>1</sup>.

---

8th of May, and it was consecrated on the 29th of September, by which means both these days became stated festivals."—JOHNSON, in loc.

<sup>1</sup> The first edition of this work overlooked, because it is omitted in the Councils of Spelman and Wilkins, an alleged law of Ethelred, referred to 1014, and prescribing the tripartite division of tythes. Upon this much stress has been lately laid as an authority against church-rates. It appeared originally in the Leges Anglo-Saxonicae of Wilkins, published in 1721. As it was not admitted into his Concilia, published in 1737, he is thought to have considered it spurious. The late Mr. Price (a most competent judge) was of that opinion; pronouncing the MS. in which it occurs, "an unauthorized assemblage of points of canon-law, gathered indifferently from foreign and home sources, made for private use, and at different periods, since some passages in the MS. are metrical, others again acknowledge that the practices they record are observed beyond sea, while all chronology is neglected, the provisions of Athelstan being made to follow those of Edgar." Mr. Hale observes of this canon, "It very ill agrees with a law of Edmund, enacted some seventy years before it; and if it ever was a law, it was, as respects the duty of repairing churches, virtually set aside and repealed within twenty years, by a law of Canute. So that, after all, admitting the genuineness of the law, the whole amount of evidence in favour of a legal division of tythes, is this, that for twenty years, that division

A ray from one illustrious name gleams brightly over the wretched and humiliating reign of Ethelred. While England bled at every pore, an admirable genius was indefatigably bent upon mitigating her distress, by furnishing abundantly the balm of sound instruction. It was Elfric who thus memorably laboured for his unhappy country. Nor has the age ennobled by such generous industry, alone had reason to rejoice in his appearance. His was the prolific pen to which we owe a very large proportion of extant Anglo-Saxon literature. Through him yet resounds a voice from our ancient Church, upon many questions in theology. Upon one, the witness borne is important above measure. It has retorted, with force irresistible, that odious imputation of a rash and indefensible disregard for antiquity by which Romanists would fain cast obloquy upon the Reformation. Elfric brands indelibly with innovation, and in a vital point, the very principles which Cranmer found possessed of English pulpits. The venerable Anglo-Saxon thus convicts a party which claims exclusively his country's ancient faith, of an unconscious, but a perilous departure from it. He proves the teachers of a later period to have inculcated essential doctrines, even positively condemned by that honoured ancestry from whom the bulk of their endowments had descended.

Elfric's education was begun under a clergyman of slight attainments<sup>1</sup>; but completed at Winchester, in was recognised by an Anglo-Saxon law."—Antiquity of the Church-Rate System. 50. 26.

---

Even if this enactment could be proved genuine, and any English legislature could be proved to have sanctioned the collections passing under the names of Theodore and Egbert, with that which we owe to Elfric, the relevancy of these authorities would remain for proof. They relate chiefly, if not entirely, to minster tythe: our present concern is exclusively with parochial.

<sup>1</sup> Hwilon ic wiste thæt sun mæsse-preost, se the min magister

the celebrated school of Ethelwold<sup>1</sup>. For that popular and able prelate he ever entertained a filial reverence. Of personal communication with him he had probably enjoyed but little: his age forbidding it<sup>2</sup>. A deep sense of obligation could not, however, fail of overspreading his ingenuous mind towards one who had provided him access to learning. The general current of his thoughts led him also to venerate Ethelwold. Elfric zealously espoused monastic principles. He fully shared in prevailing prejudices against married clergymen<sup>3</sup>. It was was on tham timan, hæfde tha boc Genesis, and he cuthe bedæle Lyden understandan. Once I knew that a mass-priest, who was my magister at the time, had the book of Genesis, and he could partly understand Latin.—(Præfat. ÆLF. in Genes. Heptateuch, &c. Angl. Sax. Oxon. 1698, p. 1.) This ecclesiastic, Elfric proceeds to say, used to talk of Jacob's four wives. Perhaps, in addition to his illiteracy, and his indiscreet conversation, he was not formed by temper for tuition; and thus Elfric might have imbibed, almost in infancy, a prejudice against clergymen without monastic obligations, or partialities.

<sup>1</sup> "Si alicui tamen displicuerit nostra interpretatio, dicat quomodo vult, nos contenti sumus, sicut didicimus in scholâ Athelwoldi, venerabilis præsulis, qui multos ad bonum imbuit."—ÆLF. Gramm. Præf. ad calcem SOMNERI, Dict. Sax. Lat. Angl. Oxon. 1659.

<sup>2</sup> "Dulce namque erat ei (Ethelw.) adolescentes et juvenes semper docere, et Latinos libros Anglicè eis solvere, et regulas grammaticæ artis, ac metricæ rationis tradere, et jocundis alloquiis

ad meliora hortari."—(Vita S. Ethelw. Episc. Winton. Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. v. 617.) Wulfstan's name is affixed to this life; but he has done little else than copy Elfric, as appears from the variations that have been supplied by the editors, at the feet of the several pages. In the passage cited, Elfric evidently speaks from recollection; and it is a lad's recollection of a kind old man. Ethelwold died in 984. The monastery of Cerne was endowed by Ethelmer, or Ailmer, earl of Cornwall, in 987. Sigeric was archbishop of Canterbury from 989 to 994, and as Elfric sent his homilies from Cerne to the primate, styling himself monk and mass-priest, it is plain that he must have been ordained to the presbyterate by the year 989, or soon afterwards. He was probably, therefore born about the year 965, and consequently he might be some nineteen years old when Ethelwold died. It is most likely that he went to Cerne immediately upon the establishment of that house, in the year 987.—Monasticon. i. 254.

<sup>3</sup> "Erant autem tunc in viteri monasterio" (Winton.) "ubi cathe-

his opinion, evidently, that, without obedience to the rule of Benedict, high ministerial qualities were nearly hopeless. As he seems to have been eminently sober-minded, his preference for the monastic party must have rested upon some substantial ground. Nothing, probably, confirmed more strongly his conviction, than Benedictine services to literature. Whatever may be thought of the system generally established by Dunstan, Ethelwold, and Oswald, it is indisputable, that these distinguished prelates instituted important seminaries for ecclesiastical education<sup>1</sup>.

His early years having been employed most advantageously at Winchester, Elfric was called away by dra pontificalis habetur, canonici nefandis scelerum moribus implicati, elatione et insolentiâ atque luxuria præventi, adeo ut nonnulli eorum dedignarentur missas suo ordine celebrare, repudiantes uxores quas illicitè duxerant, et alias accipientes, gulæ et ebrietati jugiter dediti. Quod minimè ferens sanctus vir, Adelwoldus, datâ licentiâ a Rege Eadgaro, expulit citissimè detestandos blasphematores Dei de monasterio; et adducens monachos de Abandoniâ, locavit illic, quibus ipse abbas et episcopus extitit.”—(Vit. S. Ethelw. Acta SS. Ord. Bened. v. 614.) This harsh language, it is fair to believe, might have been substantiated by a few cases of gross misconduct. All large bodies of men will, unhappily, supply such, especially in a semi-barbarous age. But remove such cases out of sight, and Elfric’s description will be found but little different from those libellous caricatures of clerical life, by which prejudice and malevolence have ever sought to blacken the character of ecclesiastics making no ascetic pretensions. It was a just retribution upon the monastic body, that its own eventual expulsion was promoted and defended upon like imputations of moral delinquency.

<sup>1</sup> “Ab initio enim Edgari Regis, ad annum circiter millesimum singuli ferè Angliæ episcopi et abbates ex monasteriis Abbandoniensi, Glastoniensi, et Wintoniensi delecti sunt.”—(WHARTON, Dissert. de duobus Elfricis. Angl. Sacr. i. 126.) “Illo enim tempore, nulli ferè digni habebantur, qui monasteria et ecclesias seu regerent, seu instituerent, nisi qui e Dunstani, Ethelwoldi, aut Oswaldi scholis prodissent.”—(Ib. 132.) The ascetic character earned in these admired seminaries was, no doubt, a powerful recommendation to the candidate for ecclesiastical promotion. But it must be supposed that this was commonly accompanied by more valuable qualities. In Elfric’s case it was eminently so.

Elphege, then bishop there. Ailmer, earl of Cornwall, had recently founded an abbey at Cerne, in Dorsetshire, and he requested Elphege to select a monk fit for establishing it upon a proper footing. Elfric was chosen; but his new duties were insufficient for a mind so active, and he sought further occupation in an undertaking of great popular utility. Usage and authority demanded a sermon from the clergy on every Sunday<sup>1</sup>. Satisfactorily to answer such a call is far from easy to minds highly cultivated, and sufficiently provided with literary appliances. Among a priesthood, slightly educated, and with a very limited access to books, the weekly sermon must have often pained a hearer of any information, or of more than ordinary ability. Elfric kindly resolved upon providing a remedy for this evil. He selected and freely translated from those established authorities, Austin, Jerome, Bede, Gregory, Smaragdus, and occasionally Haymo, forty homilies on subjects chiefly scriptural. This course was deemed sufficient for a year. The volume being completed, he sent it to Sigeric, archbishop of Canterbury, especially calling his attention to the great care taken for avoiding heresy and error. By this prelate these discourses were highly approved, and their use authorized. The learned monk attested his gratification by transmitting forty more homilies to Sigeric. These are of a more legendary character; but again challenge a rigid inquiry into the soundness of their doctrine<sup>2</sup>. They were greeted with

<sup>1</sup> Riht is that preostas ælce Sunnan-dæge folce bodian.—(Sinodalia Decreta. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii, 121. f. 29.) Right is that priests preach to the folk every Sunday.

<sup>2</sup> "Ego, Ælfricus, alumnus Athelwoldi, benevoli et venerabilis

præsulis, salutem exopto Domino Archiepiscopo Sigerico in Domino. — Nec ubique transtulimus verbum ex verbo, sed sensum ex sensu, cavendo tamen diligentissimè deceptivos errores, ne inveniremur aliquâ hæresi seducti, seu

the same success as the former series. Another literary labour of great utility, was a Latin grammar, compiled from Priscian, and, with Elfric's usual patriotism, in his native tongue<sup>1</sup>. Before this undertaking, probably, his diocesan, Wulfine, bishop of Sherborne<sup>2</sup>, had requested fallaciâ fuscati. Hos namque auctores in hâc explanatione sumus secuti, videlicet Augustinum Hipponensum, Hieronimum, Bedam, Gregorium, Smaragdum, et aliquando Haymonem: horundemque auctoritas ab omnibus Catholicis libentissimè suscipitur. Quadraginta sententias in isto libro posuimus, credentes hoc sufficere posse per annum fidelibus, si integrè eis a ministris Domini recitentur in ecclesiâ. Precor modo obnixè Almitatem tuam, mitissime pater, Sigerice, ut digneris corrigere, per tuam industriam, si aliquos nævos malignæ hæresis, aut nebulosæ fallaciæ, in nostrâ interpretatione reperies; et ascribatur dehinc hic codicillus tuæ auctoritati, non utilitati nostræ despiciabilis personæ.”—(HICKES, Theas. ii. 153.) “Quia nostrum studium nimium laudasti, gratanter illam interpretationem suscipiens, festinavimus hunc sequentem librum, sicuti omnipotentis Dei gratia nobis dictavit, interpretare. Igitur in anteriore opere ordinavimus XL. sermones; in isto vero non minor numerus sententiarum invenitur. Perlegat, quæso, Benignitas vestra hanc nostram interpretationem, quemadmodum et priorem, et dijudicet si fidelibus Catholicis habenda est, an abjicienda.”—Ib. 157.

<sup>1</sup> “Ego, Ælfricus, ut minus sapiens, has excerptiones de Prisciano minore, vel majore, vobis

puerulis tenellis ad vestram linguam transferre studui.”—(ÆLF. Præf. Gramm. SOMNER.) An ancient MS. of this Grammar in the Library of St. John's College, Oxford, appears to be entitled Ælfrici Præsulis Grammatica.—(HICKES, Theas. ii. 104.) Hence a recent author concludes that Elfric did not write the Grammar until he had attained a station of eminence. He considers him to have written it soon after his advancement to the abbotcy of Peterborough.—Ancient Hist. Engl. and Fr. exemplified. Lond. 1830, p. 66.

<sup>2</sup> Great obscurity has attended the name of Wulfine; but a charter, published by Wharton (Angl. Sacr. i. 170), renders it sufficiently plain that he was bishop of Sherborne about the close of the tenth century. This instrument, dated 998, under Ethelred, authorizes Wulfine to settle a community of monks around his cathedral of Sherborne. Elfric resided in Dorsetshire about that time, and Wulfine's reformation at Sherborne was exactly such as might be expected from one who sought his advice. In addition to these evidences of Wulfine's identity, Wharton met with a MS. history of Westminster, by John Flete, in which that writer relates, on the authority of Sulcard, a monk living fifty years after the time, that Wulfine was made bishop of Sherborne in 980, and so con-him to prepare a summary of admonition and information most needed by the clergy, and suitable for addressing to them. Obedience to this request produced a celebrated piece, yet extant in Saxon, resembling the episcopal charges of later times. It illustrates, largely, existing religious usages, and is particularly valuable, because it establishes, incontrovertibly, that ancient England and modern Rome are utterly at variance in an essential article of faith. Two similar Saxon pieces, happily extant also, afterwards proceeded from Elfric's pen, and one of them commands attention by a contradiction, equally strong, to the capital article of Romish belief. These interesting documents apparently were prepared for Wulfstan, archbishop of York<sup>1</sup>. Other distinguished persons naturally became desirous of benefiting by industry so able, pious and unwearied. Elfric was, accordingly, led into his various translations from tinued until about 998.—(Ib. 132.) Elfric's epistle to Wulfsine, generally called his Canons, is to be found, more or less completely, in Lambarde, Spelman, and Wilkins, and has been translated by Johnson. It contains one of the testimonies against transubstantiation, published by Foxe and L'Isle. It was again printed under the Record Commission, in 1840. ii. 342.

<sup>1</sup> There were two Wulfstans, archbishops of York. The former died in 956, the latter in 1023, after something more than twenty years' possession of the see.—(Angl. Sacr. i. 133. J. STUBBS, X. Script. 1700.) To this latter, only, could Elfric have written. In his epistle, as extant in the Bodleian Library (MSS. Junii, 121. f. 111), Elfric only speaks of himself as "a brother to mass-priests." Hence he might be thought to have written this epistle soon after the year 1002. But in the Latin prologue to the two epistles published by Wilkins (Leges Angl.-Sax. Lond. 1721, p. 166), he designates himself "abbot." Of these two epistles, the second is the beginning of that in the Bodleian Library, mentioned above. It bears the following title: De Secunda Epistola, Quando Dividis Crisma. Some of it may be seen, described as Ælfric's Epistle, entitled QUANDO DIVIDIS CHRISMA, in Mr. Thorpe's Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, ii. 390. But this brief portion does not include the famous testimony against transubstantiation. If Elfric really were abbot, when that piece was written, this must be referred, most probably, to some date after 1005.

Scripture. He wrote, besides, a life of Ethelwold<sup>1</sup>, a glossary, a body of monastic discipline, and other pieces<sup>2</sup>. The learned energy of his earlier years has, indeed, rarely been surpassed; and although, like other Anglo-Saxons, he wrote but little quite original, yet, considering the time of his appearance, he has fully earned a foremost rank in the literature of England.

The history of this distinguished scholar is, however, involved in thick obscurity. To the scanty particulars

<sup>1</sup> His Life of Ethelwold is said, in the preface, to have been written twenty years after that prelate's death: an event occurring in the middle of 984. It must have been written, therefore, either in the year 1004, or in the earlier part of 1005. It is dedicated to Kenulf, bishop of Winchester, who was advanced to that see in 1005, and who died in July, 1006. Elfric was now "abbot;" and he seems to have been made abbot of Peterborough in 1005.

<sup>2</sup> In the face of Elfric's voluminous authorship, and of several Anglo-Saxon pieces from other pens, it is amusing to read the following extract from Hardouin's Chronologia Vet. Test. (Amst. 1700, pp. 34, 35), in the Preface to Hicke's Thesaurus (p. xxiii.): At Saxonica quæ in quibusdam dubiæ (ut Coptica) fidei monumenta extat, nihil aliud quam Germanica illius ævi est, quo sunt hæc (Coptica) exarata characteribus ab artifice excogitatis, diversis certe ab his, quibus Offa rex suos olim nummos inscripsit, qui sunt omnino Latini, quales ii quibus id nomen hic exhibemus. Ejus autem linguæ est Saxonica Ælfrici nomine homilia de Eucharistia, Ratramni sensu stilo, atque ipso subinde ser-

mone conscripta, hoc est, hæretico. At Ælfricus non Anglicum, Saxonicumve nomen est, sed Hebræum, DEUS REDEMPTOR. Nam אלל Deus est: quod nomen quoniam nihil interest, utrum ÆL an AL efferas, ideo et ÆLFRICUS et ALFRICUS in libris scribitur. פרק redimere est ex Vulgato interprete, Ps. cxxxv. 24, quem tum ob peritiam viri singularem, tum aliis de causis, talium nominum architecti sequuntur. This curious passage, Hickes very truly observes, has as many errors as lines; for neither are Anglo-Saxon monuments few, nor of dubious faith, nor written in any characters invented for deception; nor are the characters on Offa's coins altogether Latin (if they were, it would not follow that MSS. must be written in the same), nor is Elfric a factitious word, coined by some Hebraist, intent upon imposition, but a Saxon proper name, borne by many individuals of that nation. This whole tissue of error and absurdity is, however, well worthy of notice, as a proof of the despairing embarrassment with which Romanists encounter Elfric, conscious that he overthrows the main peculiarity of their creed.

already given from incidental passages in his own works, must be added, from the same source, that he was a priest, monk, and abbot. We have ancient authority also for believing that he became eventually a bishop<sup>1</sup>. Ælfric was not merely, therefore, an industrious man of letters, valued by none but students, and even known to few besides. His transcendent qualities were duly acknowledged in professional elevation. Yet neither the abbey over which he presided, nor the see that he occupied, can be named with absolute certainty. Contemporary bishops and abbots, most of them, probably, useful and able in their day, but without any particular claim upon posterity, are accurately commemorated in existing records. Inquiries into Ælfric's preferments demand research; and will, at last, be requited by nothing more satisfactory than probabilities. The following appears to be an outline of his real history. His revered master, Ethelwold, had taken especial interest in re-establishing those future glories of England's fen district, the abbeys of Peterborough, Ely, and Thorney, which had been ruined by the Danes<sup>2</sup>; converting them, of course, into regular Benedictine houses. Ælfric seems to have gained his title of abbot from the monastery first named<sup>3</sup>. If so, he had a very narrow escape from

<sup>1</sup> "O, ye mass-priests, my brethren!" are the opening words in Ælfric's epistle, prepared, as it is considered, for Archbishop Wulfstan. Ælfric, munuc; Ælfric, monk.—(Prefat. in Genes.) Ælfric, abbod; Ælfric, abbot.—(De Vet. Test. edit. L'Isle.) "Ælfricum demum episcopali dignitate auctum esse constat ex epistola ejus MS. in Collegio Corporis Christi Cantab. quæ inscribitur; Ælfrici Episcopi ad jam nunc ordinatos."—Angl. Sacr. i. 33.

<sup>2</sup> BROMTON. X. Script. 868.

<sup>3</sup> Wharton supposes him to have been abbot of Winchester. He grounds this opinion upon his dedication to Kenulf, in which he calls himself "an abbot and a Winchester scholar, Wintoniensem alumnus." Hence Wharton thinks that his education and abbacy must be referred to the same place; and a victorious party of invading Danes. Having succeeded in reaching the royal presence, Ethelred sent him, in charge of Emma the queen, over to Normandy, her native country<sup>1</sup>. After some stay upon the continent, Elfric returned home; and his unquestionable he is confirmed in this belief by Stubbs, who designates Elfric, archbishop of York, Wintoniensis præpositus.—(Acta PP. Ebor. X. Script. 1700.) This designation, however, is hardly sufficiently precise for a positive conclusion. The author of Ancient History, English and French, exemplified in a Regular Dissection of the Saxon Chronicle, says of Wharton, “No man knew better than he, if he had taken time, that the old monastery, or cathedral church of Winchester, of which he says Elfric was, beyond all doubt, abbot, never had an abbot, nomine abbot; but, as well before Ethelwold’s reform as afterwards, was governed by the bishop in place of an abbot.” The principle of this is distinctly stated in Ethelred’s charter to Wulfsine: “Et quia mos minime—ut in episcopali sede, abbas constituatur: fiat ipse episcopus eis abbas et pater.”—(Angl. Sacr. i. 170.) In the extract also from the Life of Ethelwold, already used (p. 217), that prelate is said, most probably in Elfric’s own words, to have been abbas et episcopus of the monks whom he transferred from Abingdon to Winchester. In November 1005, Ælfric, archbishop of Canterbury, died. Elphege, bishop of Winchester, succeeded him; and Kenulf, abbot of Peterborough, to whom Elfric dedicated his Life of Ethelwold, was advanced to the see of Winchester. The recent writer cited above, to whom inquirers into Elfric’s history are much obliged, has very reasonably concluded (p. 64) that he was immediately preferred to the abbacy of Peterborough. If he had not been abbot there, it seems strange that his corpse should have been carried thither for interment; and the probability is, that he was the immediate successor of his friend and patron, Kenulf.

<sup>1</sup> Sax. Chr. 191. He is there called Ælfsige, as the text stands; but the recent author cited in the last note, conjectures that the name was designedly substituted for se, the Saxon definite article masculine. Florence of Worcester, however, calls Ælfric, archbishop of Canterbury, Ælfsius. For particulars of Elfric’s escape, see INGULPH. (Script. post Bed. 507.) As the passage appears there, the transactions might seem to have occurred in 1018; but then they are mixed up with the name of Sweyne, under whom, in fact, they took place. Sweyne, however, died in 1014; Elfric escaped from Peterborough, and went to Normandy with Queen Emma, in 1013. Ingulf, who relates the particulars of his escape, does not name him; but, probably, the text may not appear there exactly as Ingulf left it.

superiority recommended him to the discerning eye of Canute, then occupant of the throne<sup>1</sup>. Under that fortunate and able Dane, we can trace him to the archbishopric of York; with which he probably held the bishopric of Worcester during several years<sup>2</sup>. He died at Southwell in 1051, and he was buried in the abbey of Peterborough<sup>3</sup>.

That such facts should be unascertainable by direct testimony, is among the more striking of historical problems. It is true that, fifteen years after Elfric's death, <sup>1</sup> "Tu, Sacerdos egregie Ælfrice, nostri Regis C. obtutibus semper assistis, et secreta ejusdem consilia a te non sunt abscondita, sed per tuæ industriam sapientiæ discernendo rimantur."—(Facundissimo Sacerd. Ælfr. ad calcem SOMNERI Dict. p. 53.) Wharton says very truly, that King C. could be no other than King Canute.—(Angl. Sacr. i. 134.) Elfric's promotion to the see of York under that prince is, indeed, strong evidence of his favour with him.

<sup>2</sup> One MS. of the Saxon Chronicle has, under the year 1023, Her forthferde Wulfstan arceb. and feng Ælfric to. Here departed Wulfstan archb. and Ælfric took to.—(203.) What did he take to? Undoubtedly to the see of York. But Wulfstan held Worcester also, as had his immediate predecessors. Worcester cathedral was converted into a Benedictine monastery, which York was not; and, accordingly, the archbishops, being Benedictine monks, were allowed to hold in commendam a see which offered them a cathedral where they could reside in their proper character of abbot. It must appear probable that these precedents operated in Elfric's case; and that, if the clause cited from the Saxon Chronicle had been entire, we should find that he took to both sees. Existing catalogues of the Worcester bishops might, however, lead to a different conclusion. But there are difficulties in these which leave room for conjecturing that Elfric really held Worcester until the year 1034.—See Anc. Hist. Engl. and Fr. 89.

<sup>3</sup> STUBBS. X. Script. 1700. A MS. Consuetudinary of the Monastery of Peterborough, in the Lambeth Library, has, accordingly, the following entry in the calendar: Die IX. Calend. Februarii. Depositio Dompni Elfrici Archiepiscopi.—(WHARTON. Angl. Sacr. i. 134.) The sacrilegious violence and fanaticism which disgraced the interval between Charles the First's troubles and his son's restoration, brought to light accidentally, in the cathedral of Peterborough, a chest or shrine, about three feet long, and containing human bones, inscribed Elfricus. This great man's remains, therefore, had been thought at one time worthy of translation, as it was called.—(Anc. Hist. Engl. and Fr. 456.) Their original coffin must have been of larger dimensions.

Normandy gained firm possession of his native land, and reduced the language in which most of his works were patriotically written, to a vulgar dialect which superior families disdained. Authors, however, arose, diligent in examining the national records, and in forming them into materials for compositions of their own; especially such of them as were favourable to the monastic cause. Elfric had this recommendation. He was repeatedly employed in regulating monasteries<sup>1</sup>. Though gifted with a vigorous understanding, he had even imbibed a firm and zealous faith in the miraculous privileges of relics<sup>2</sup>. There were two writers in early Norman times particularly led by the nature of their pursuits, and the general bent of their minds, to preserve the incidents of such a person's life. Neither of these might seem to have had any certain knowledge of his existence. One of them, the wonder-loving Osbern, mentions incidentally an Elfric Bata, to whose impious activity he assigns a temporary cessation of the miracles expected by worshippers at Dunstan's tomb. The spirit of that sainted archbishop, we are told, was under the necessity of putting Bata to flight, before it could continue its accustomed deeds of mercy<sup>1</sup>. The other ancient author is William of Malmesbury, the great luminary of Anglo-Norman ecclesiastical antiquity; and he speaks of an Elfric, who was both an abbot and a prelate, and an able industrious translator. But he writes as if he had never examined his works. Their fame, he does not dissemble, had reached his ears; but, with exemplary caution, he expresses a doubt whether, from lapse of time, it might not have been greater than the pieces merited<sup>2</sup>. Yet <sup>1</sup> A cripple, Osbern says, having vainly sought relief at Dunstan's tomb, was returning homeward in despair. At a resting-place the saint appeared to him in his sleep, and said,—“Non poteram his diebus requiem corporis mei visitare nec præsentiam meam filiis ibidem manentibus exhibere. Nam ecclesiam Dei Elfricus, cognomento Bata, exheredare tentavit.”—(De Mirac. S. Dunst. Auctore Osberno Monacho. Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. v. 692.) Of course the saint announced himself now at liberty, and desired the cripple to return; who, obeying, found relief. The fact is, that there was an Elfric Bata, a disciple of the great Elfric, but a far inferior man; who made some additions to a colloquy of his illustrious master, for the use of boys.—(HICKES, The. ii. 104, 105.) Osbern's object in detailing the legend as he has, could hardly be any other than to connect the name of Elfric with known inferiority, and to brand it in some undefined way with religious evil. It appears, however, from Elfric's addresses to Sigeric, that he was particularly careful to avoid the least imputation of heresy.

<sup>1</sup> "In cod. Benedictino, quem asservat Col. S. Ben. seu CC. apud Cant. sub finem Evangelii secundum Matthæum, habentur sequentia, Ego Ælfricus scripsi hunc librum in Monasterio Bathonio, et dedi Brihtwoldo Preposito." —(MARESCALL. Observ. in Vers. Angl.-Sax. 490.) Wharton conjectures, with great probability, that Elfric was sent to Bath by Elphege, bishop of Winchester, who had been the first abbot of that monastery; and that he might have been sent to other monasteries.—Angl. Sacr. i. 133.

<sup>2</sup> Elfric's homilies afford many proofs of this. His mind, accordingly, was eagerly bent upon the acquisition of relics, even while he lived with the queen in Normandy, an exile from his abbey. He found the abbey of Bonneval in great distress from the plunder which it had recently undergone, and hence willing to sell the body of St. Florentine. He bought this, all but the head, for five hundred pounds, and eventually lodged it at Peterborough.—Sax. Chr. 192.

<sup>2</sup> “Eum peritum literarum, præsertimque elegantissimum interpretem, nisi fallax tradit velustas. Elfricus sanè cum grandævus esset, in episcopum Cridiensem altatus, vix. IV. annis superfuit. Reliquit aliquantos codices, non exigua ingenii monumenta, Vitam Sancti Adelwoldi, antequam eam Wolstanus operosius concinnaret, Abbreviationem Passionis Sancti Edmundi; libros multos ex Latino in patrium sermonem versos.”—(W. MALMESB. de Vitâ Aldhelm. Angl. Sacr. ii. 33.) It is unquestionable that the author thus described was the great Elfric. But we know, from himself, that his Life of Ethelwold could not have been written before the year 1004. Now Wharton makes it appear that Elfric, bishop of Crediton, succeeded to that see about 977. By Malmesbury's own account, then, he must have died about 981.—(Angl. Sacr. i. 129.) In the Monasticon (p. 8), we read that “Elfric, bishop, abbot, and monk of Glastonbury,” died in 988. This is equally irreconcilable with the known date of the Life of Ethelwold. Godwin (De Præsull.) makes Elfric, bishop of Crediton, to have died in 999. But even this will not do.

the Elfric, upon whom, apparently, Malmesbury had fallen by mistake, though something anterior to the most illustrious bearer of that name, was only just before him. He was only removed by a very few generations from Malmesbury himself. It is, therefore, scarcely credible that a man should have grown up in bookish habits from childhood, as, probably, every literary man has; this, too, at a time when books were few; and yet should hardly have examined a voluminous national writer, of whose high character he was well aware,—one also whom even his own showing would place at no considerable distance from himself. Such cases naturally suggest a suspicion of unfairness. It is not easy to acquit either Osbern or Malmesbury of a deliberate intention to suppress the memory of Elfric, and to bury his very name under a mass of hopeless uncertainty.

For this disingenuous policy, a reason may be readily conjectured. Osbern was the humble friend of Lanfranc, who found a passport to professional distinction in the controversy with Berenger. He fails not, accordingly, to introduce, among his histories of Anglo-Saxon times, legendary tales of miracles wrought in proof of transubstantiation<sup>1</sup>. Malmesbury, too, had taken decidedly the infection from that new theology which England received with her Norman conquerors. Hence his indignant zeal extorted from him an attack equally ludicrous and important upon the venerated character of Raban Maur<sup>2</sup>. Now Elfric's eucharistic doctrine, and that of <sup>1</sup> A legend of sacramental wine, sensibly transubstantiated into blood by Odo, may be seen in Osbern's Life of that archbishop.—(Angl. Sacr. ii. 82.) A like story, as to both the bread and wine, is related of Dunstan by this author.

—(SURIUS. iii. 330.) Such tales are not among the least striking evidences that Lanfranc's adherents were sadly embarrassed by the prevalence of a belief very different from their patron's.

<sup>2</sup> See Bampt. Lect. 413.

Raban, are identical. Both of them wrote after Paschasius Radbert had astonished studious men by his portentous novelty; and both, accordingly, have left such language upon record as only controversy commonly calls forth. Elfric's vocation, as homilist for the people, obliged him upon occasions to furnish lengthened, clear, and forcible expositions of the eucharist. In discharging this duty, he has freely used, not only language from earlier authors unfavourable to transubstantiation, but also he has embodied, for the use of ordinary congregations, the substance of Ratramn's famous controversial piece. It is no wonder that Lanfranc's admirers looked upon such an author with disgust and despair. Their master's fame rested upon endeavours to make his own eucharistic belief appear that of all Christendom in every age. Elfric proved not only that England, whose orthodoxy was unquestioned, had entertained no such doctrine, but even that she had expressly and intentionally contradicted it<sup>1</sup>; and Elfric seems to have died only fifteen years before the Conquest. Colour for charging him

---

<sup>1</sup> To well-informed English Romanists, Elfric still occasions great embarrassment. Dr. Lingard, in the notes to his Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church, (Note M. p. 576, Fr. transl.) wishes to dispose of Elfric, by labouring to make it appear that his doctrine is not irreconcilable with Romanism, and that he was a writer "of inferior merit," who lived when Anglo-Saxon intelligence had seriously declined. Upon the former of these representations, the Paschal Homily especially, may be left by Protestants to speak for itself. Against an imputation of "inferior merit,"

Elfric's numerous works are a triumphant defence. It is true that, when he lived the brightest age of Anglo-Saxon Literature was over; but this national misfortune certainly was no great impediment to his own improvement. Nor did it affect his doctrine; he explained the eucharist in strict unison with all the most illustrious Anglo-Saxon divines. Undoubtedly he is more clear, full, and forcible. But then Radbert had written since Bede and Alcuin. Hence controversy had suggested and demanded language for which earlier theologians found no occasion.

with innovation, there was none whatever. The century before him had produced Erigena, one of Radbert's earliest and most formidable opponents; yet apparently the friend of Alfred. Erigena's doctrine, too, might be connected satisfactorily with Alcuin and Bede; only controversy had won for it an energy, breadth, and precision, for which earlier scholars had found no occasion. Thus Elfric merely finished, but with a vigour equalled, probably, by Erigena alone, that unyielding array of testimony against Lanfranc's new divinity which echoes from the whole theological school of ancient England. Against an author so recent, and in such full possession of the popular ear, discretion forbade a direct assault. But his unpalatable doctrine was conveyed in Saxon,—a language with which Anglo-Normans, of any distinction, were unacquainted. Hence, after a few years, no cultivated mind was ever likely to be awakened by hearing any of his homilies. Books were few; and such as Elfric left might shortly be rendered useless by refraining from translating them into Latin. They were actually classed among old and useless books, by the monks of Glastonbury, in cataloguing their library, so early as the thirteenth century<sup>1</sup>. The despised populace might imperceptibly be weaned from the opinions of their fathers by retrenching such parts of the customary sermon as had grown unfashionable<sup>2</sup>. Authors would soon see that great

<sup>1</sup> WRIGHT. Biog. Brit. Lit. 108.

<sup>2</sup> For the manner in which the famous Paschal Homily has been treated in the C. C. C. C. MS. 162, see Bampt. Lect., 428. A like liberty was taken with the Homily for St. Peter's Day, also printed in that volume. (p. 126.) Among the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum (Vespasian, D. 14. f. 122), is found the beginning of that homily; the part, namely, that details the privileges of St. Peter in the words of Scripture. But all the latter part, beginning men, wishing Elfric to be forgotten, were likely to patronise those who involved his very name in obloquy and confusion. Such was the policy pursued; and being favoured by a prevailing disregard for Anglo-Saxon literature, even by general ignorance of the character in which it was preserved, Elfric's memory became all but wholly lost. When, accordingly, monastic libraries were dispersed, and Englishmen eagerly inquired into the language and religion of their distant ancestry, they were at a loss to identify the principal author that gave such information.

A presumption in favour of Elfric's influence with Canute arises from many of that prince's acts. The Danish conqueror revived a taste for pilgrimages to Rome by undertaking one himself<sup>1</sup>. He was a liberal patron to the monastic order<sup>2</sup>. Under him was holden a legislative assembly at Winchester, which confirmed churches in their established inviolability, and re-enacted the penalties imposed under Edgar for withholding ecclesiastical dues<sup>3</sup>. Another of these laws both displays that anxiety for clerical celibacy which distinguished Elfric, and a liberal estimate of the ecclesiastical profession. An unmarried clergyman was to enjoy the privileges of a thane<sup>4</sup>. In a different series of Canute's laws, is one proving the reparation of churches to have been a burden imposed by the legislature upon property with "Bede, the Expositor," is omitted. In this latter part, however, are several passages unfavourable to the papal pretensions.

---

<sup>1</sup> In 1031.—(Sax. Chr. 206.) Malmesbury's date is the same, as he places it in the fifteenth years of his reign. Ingulf places it a year earlier; but Mr. Wheaton says that the Danish chronologists seem to have conclusively proved its occurrence in 1027.—Hist. of the Northmen, 327, note.

<sup>2</sup> INGULPH. MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 507, 41.

<sup>3</sup> LL. Canut. R. cann. 3, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. SPELM. i. 544. WILK. i. 302.

<sup>4</sup> Ib. can. 6. SPELM. i. 543. WILK. i. 301.

generally, and not exclusively upon the tythes. "All people," it is declared, "are bound of right to assist in repairing the church<sup>1</sup>." In the same series appears a strict prohibition of all pagan worship and usages<sup>2</sup>.

The brief reigns of Canute's two sons, Harold Harefoot and Hardicanute, afford no materials for ecclesiastical history. Nor is it much otherwise with the succeeding reign of Edward the Confessor. England, naturally rejoiced in finding herself again under a prince of her ancient dynasty, regarded Edward with fond partiality. His personal qualities, indeed, were worthy of the people's love. He was mild and well-intentioned, displaying on the throne those dispositions that are most estimable in private life. Among monastic writers he has high celebrity. They could not fail of extolling that munificence which founded the noble Abbey of Westminster. Their eulogies were justly due to a monarch who made religion popular by the strictness of his own example. Their prejudices were highly gratified by the spectacle of a distinguished married man avoiding commerce with his wife. They were not likely to reason that even if this abstinence had ever been rigidly maintained, personal aversion or mere constitution might be the real cause of it. Nor did it

<sup>1</sup> To cyric-bote sceal ealle folc fylstan mid rihte. "Ad fanum reficiendum omnes quidem jure debebant."—(LL. Canut. can. 63. LAMBARDE, de Priscis Anglorum Legibus. Cantab. 1644, p. 121.) Johnson has appended (sub an. 1018) the following note to his translation: "This law, which is omitted by Sir H. S. (Spelman), shows that the reparation of churches was devolved on the people sooner than is commonly thought." The preamble states that the body of statutes in which this occurs, was enacted in a Witena-gemot holden at Winchester, at Christmas. It is said that Canute mid his witena getheahthe gered: decreed with his senators' advice.—(LAMB. 97.) He seems to have holden a legislative council at Winchester in 1021.

<sup>2</sup> LL. Canut. R. can. 5. SPELM. i. 553. WILK. i. 306.

harmonize with cloistered habits to remark, that if no such impediment intervened Edward's conduct was anything rather than wise and patriotic. He ought surely to have felt some anxiety for securing his country against the miseries of a disputed succession. In him, however, was merely discerned a sainted virgin king, fitted for occupying a conspicuous station among monastic heroes, and for stamping credibility upon some of those legendary tales which delighted a superstitious age. But, although the Confessor stands conspicuously religious among English kings, he does not make much figure as an ecclesiastical legislator. There are, indeed, certain laws relating to the Church which pass under his name. These, however, were compiled after William had conquered England: and they seem rather to be authorized statements of laws in force while Edward reigned, than enactments of his legislature. They confirm the Church's immunities<sup>1</sup> and claims to tythes<sup>2</sup>, adding those upon profits in trading<sup>3</sup>. They likewise confirm the papal claim for Peter-pence. But they make no mention of the customary assessments for public worship. One of them is remarkable for kindly declaring that the Jews are under the king's protection<sup>4</sup>. Of that most memorable among nations great numbers had recently fled into western countries before the fanatic fury of Mahometanism; and it is pleasing to know that England did not deny them an asylum. Another of the Confessor's laws provides outlawry and confiscation as penalties of usury<sup>5</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> LL. S. Edw. R. et Conf. cann. 2, 6, 7. SPELM. i. 619, 620. WILK. i. 310, 311.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. cann. 8, 9.

<sup>3</sup> "De negotiationibus, et omnibus rebus quas dederit Dominus, decima pars ei reddenda est, qui novem partes simul cum decimâ largitur."—Can. 9. SPELM. i. 621. WILK. i. 311.

<sup>4</sup> Can. 22.

<sup>5</sup> Ib. 23.

Edward's Norman education had rendered him almost a foreigner<sup>1</sup>, and indiscreetly partial to the French. The numbers of them whom he patronized gave a powerful influence to their language and manners. To the Confessor's reign, accordingly, may be traced that prevailing affectation of continental usages which Englishmen have long ranked among their national weaknesses. The king probably spoke French more freely than his native tongue. His Norman courtiers, generally, must have been unable to master the Anglo-Saxon. Hence, that noble idiom was branded with vulgarity; and thus even before the Conquest English gentlemen used their humbler countrymen to regard the speaking of French as a mark of superior breeding<sup>2</sup>. One of Edward's Norman friends was Robert, a monk of Jumieges, to whom he had owed some obligations while in exile. Him he preferred to the see of London, and afterwards to that of Canterbury. Other sees were also filled by foreigners. At length national antipathies and envy being effectively aroused, a powerful combination drove these adventurers back to the continent<sup>3</sup>. Canterbury was now bestowed upon Stigand, bishop of Winchester; a see which he continued to hold, thereby committing, as monastic writers represent, a very grave offence. They might seem to have forgotten that Dunstan's character is liable to a like imputation<sup>4</sup>. Stigand, however, was one of the many distinguished Anglo-Saxons whom William found it desirable to dispossess. Hence, writers who sought Norman patronage, are naturally

<sup>1</sup> "Penè in Gallicum transierat."—INGULPH. Script. post Bed. 509.

<sup>2</sup> "Gallicum idioma omnes magnates in suis curiis, tan-

quam magnum gentilitium loqui."
—Ib.

<sup>3</sup> MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 116.

<sup>4</sup> Dunstan held Worcester with London.

anxious to paint him in unfavourable colours. They are, however, driven to admit his wisdom and efficiency<sup>1</sup>. His primacy deserves notice, because it was exercised under circumstances even then unusual, and eventually represented as fatal to the powers of a metropolitan. Stigand never presented himself at the papal court to sue for a pall. Upon occasions he seems to have used one that his predecessor left behind<sup>2</sup>; or it may be that he wore one sent to him, during a contest for the papacy by a party who failed in maintaining his ground<sup>3</sup>. Certainty upon these points, if attainable, would be of little or no importance. But it is otherwise with Stigand's indisputable reception as primate. In this, England manifested a feeling of ecclesiastical independence which may surprise those who have hastily assumed her entire dependance upon Rome from Augustine to the Reformation.

Edward's unfortunate successor, Harold, had previously to his brief possession of the crown, founded the noble monastery of Waltham. To this act of liberality, however, he does not seem to have been tempted by any partiality for the Benedictine order: his establish-

<sup>1</sup> "Archiepiscopatum septedecim annis tantis honoribus adjungeret: alias sanè nec imprudens, nec inefficax."—MALMESB. Script. post Bed. 116.

<sup>2</sup> MS. profession of Remigius, bishop of Lincoln, made to Lanfranc, cited by Inett.—(Hist. of the Engl. Ch. ch. i. 387.) Remigius had been consecrated by Stigand; and Lanfranc insisted upon a new profession, because he maintained that Stigand had been excommunicated by the pope for his contumacy. This, however, is nothing in favour of the papal cause, for it is clear that whatever Rome might have done against Stigand, England paid no attention to it.

<sup>3</sup> Inett (p. 384) examines this question at considerable length, and shows it to be far from clear as to the particular pope, or pretender, who is said to have complimented Stigand with a pall. The matter is, however, of but little importance on any account. The truth, most probably, appears in the profession of Remigius.

ment being arranged for secular canons<sup>1</sup>. The monks, therefore, had not triumphed over all opposition. The ancient economy of an English religious house yet found powerful friends; and the two rival systems must have been often warmly contrasted with each other, down to the very edge of Norman times. Facilities were thus afforded, obviously, for William's enterprise. The monks and canons were not anxious merely for the prevalence of their opinions respectively; they were struggling also for the endowments which each other possessed: hence was extensively nurtured a disposition for political changes; a numerous party ever seeking adherents for them, in the hope of gaining some advantage hitherto unattainable.

Upon doctrines prevalent during the last period of Anglo-Saxon religious history, Elfric's remains afford much interesting information. They prove, forcibly and clearly, that the ancient Church of England never wavered in her invaluable testimony, against transubstantiation<sup>2</sup>. They show satisfactorily that she did not <sup>1</sup> The abbey of Waltham was founded in 1062; namely, four years before Harold's obtainment of the throne.—(Monast. ii. 13.) In 1117 regular canons were substituted for the seculars under papal authority.—Ib.

---

<sup>2</sup> On tham halgam husle we thicgeath Cristes lichaman: se hlaf is sothlice his lichama gastlice; theah the se ungelareda thæs gelyfan ne cunne.—(Serm. de Lege Dei. Bibl. Publ. Cant. MSS. ii. 4—6. p. 175.) In the holy housel we receive Christ's body: the loaf is truly his body spiritually, though the unlearned know not how to believe it. This passage is evidently the key to testimony from antiquity cited in favour of transubstantiation. The gross and irreligious identified completely the sacramental elements with ordinary food. Divines taught that consecration converted them spiritually into Christ's body and blood. Such conversion, however, applies to spiritual receiving alone. This ancient homily, therefore, teaches the same doctrine as the catechism of the reformed Church of England. In this we learn that "the body and blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper."

hold such opinions upon St. Peter's alleged privileges, and upon papal jurisdiction, as Romanists have maintained in later years<sup>1</sup>. They are irreconcilable with that fascinating lure, provided by scholastic ingenuity, which would make mere attrition ample medicine for the soul. Elfric taught the people, from St. Jerome, that very doctrine which Tyndale subsequently recommended as a sound view of sacerdotal absolution<sup>2</sup>. A belief, however, in transubstantiation, and an implicit reliance upon absolution, are the corner-stones of modern Romanism. William the Conqueror, therefore, found established a religious system, different essentially from that which Henry the Eighth overthrew. Externally, the Church indeed had undergone no very striking change: the Anglo-Saxon ritual being

---

With this view agrees the following passage from an ancient piece: De Ecclesiasticis Gradibus. — (Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 121. f. 39.) *Se mæsse-preost getacnath Crist sylfne, and that altare getacnath Cristes rode, and seo oflete getacnath Cristes lichaman, and win and wæter on tham calice, geswutelath tha halignessa the of Cristes sidan utfleowan, thæt wæs blod and wæter. The mass-priest betokeneth Christ himself, and the altar betokeneth Christ's rood (cross), and the oflet betokeneth Christ's body, and wine and water in the chalice manifesteth the holiness which from Christ's side outflowed, that was blood and water. In this passage the word oflet comes from the Latin oblata, which is ab offerendo, and denotes a small cake made for the sacrament; Du Cange cites Bromton to shew that the term was applied* to unconsecrated bread. That historian, speaking of Hugh de St. Victor's death, in the time of King Stephen, says, that on his desire of the eucharist, "simplicem oblatam non consecratam attulerunt." — (X. Script. 1035.) In the Saxon extract, oflete, to which oblata answers, is however undoubtedly consecrated bread. The language, therefore, would alarm a believer in transubstantiation, who would quickly see the danger of saying that the sacramental bread in any state "betokeneth Christ's body." There might, however, be room for doubt upon such subjects, were not Elfric's Paschal Homily, and his two epistles, irresistible evidence that neither he nor the Church of England in his day, held the eucharistic belief of modern Rome.

<sup>1</sup> See Bampt. Lect. Sermon. iii. p. 135, and the preceding homily.

<sup>2</sup> Bampt. Lect., p. 300.

nearly identical with that which prevailed until the Reformation.

Ancient England was habituated to confession; it was her usage to offer prayers and eucharistic services for the dead: she was trained in a superstitious veneration for relics. In Elfric's time, and long before, she was encouraged in paying religious honours to images. Her great homilist entertained some obscure speculations upon purgatorial fires<sup>1</sup>. He lends occa-

<sup>1</sup> Fundamentum aliud nemo post ponere preter id quod positum est, quod est xp̄pus ihs. Thæt is, ne mæg nan mann lecgan othere grund-weal on thæne halgan gela-thunge buton thæne ther gelæd is; thæt is Hælend Crist. He is se grund-weal thære gastlican cyrcan, swa swa we eow ær sædon. Se apostol cwæth, Swa hwa swa getimbrath ofer thisum grund-wealle gold, oththe seolfor, oththe deorwyrthe stanas, oththe treowu, streaw, oththe ceaf, anes gehwilces mannes weorc bith swutel. Godes dæg hi geswutelath, forthan the he bith on fyre ætowod, and thæt fyr asandath hwylc heora ælces weorc bith. Gif hwæs getimbrung thurh-wunath and with-stent tham fyre, thonne underfeth se wyrhta his edlean æt Gode his weorces. Gif hwæs weorc forbyrnth, he hæfth thone hearm, and bith swa theah gehealden thurh thæt fyr. Thas word we ne magon buton micelre fyrhtu trahtnian. Thurh thæt gold we understandath gelcasan, and god ingehyd, thurh thæt seolfor, rihtlice spræce, and getingnisse on Godes lare, thurh tha deorwyrthan stanas halige mihta; and se the thyllic weorc getimbrath on Godes gela-

thunge, ne mæg thæt fyr on domes-dæg his getimbrunge forniman, forthan the thæt fyr ne derath tham godum, theah the hit tintegrie tha unrihtwisum. Gold, and seolfor, and deorwyrthe stanas beoth on fyre asandode, ac hi ne beoth swa theah mid tham fyre fornumene. Swa eac tha the habbath gode weorc, ne tholiath nane pinunga on tham bradum fyre the ofer-gæth ealne middan-eard, ac hi farath thurh thæt fyre to Criste buton ælcere dare, swilce hi on sunnan leoman faran. Se the getimbrath ofer tham grund-wealle treowa, oththe streaw, oththe ceaf, untwylice he mæg witan that his weorc seal on tham micclum fyre forbyrnan, and he hæfth thone hearm his weorces, and bith swa theah gehealden thurh thæt fyr. Thurh tha treowu, and tham streawe, and tham ceafe, synd getacnode leohtlice synnu, the beoth thurh fyr aseormode, and se wyrhta hæfth wite thæs weorces. Bith swa theah aseormod thurh thæt fyr, and sylththan he cymth thurh mærum earforthnisseto Godesrice. Sothlice se the tha heafod leahtras wyrcth, and on tham ge-endath, he mot forbyrnan on tham ecan fyre, and swa theah tha swæran synnu ne sional authority, as it seems, to the invocation of saints: his homilies, however, do not display either

beoth næfre afeormode for nanes fyres ælinge.—(Hom. in Dedicatōne Ecclesie. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. BODLEY, 342, f. 177.) Fundamentum aliud, &c. (1 Cor. iii. 11.) That is, no man can lay another ground-wall (foundation) in the holy congregation, but that which is laid, that is Jesus Christ. He is the ground-wall of the ghostly church, even as we to you ere said. The apostle quoth: Whoever buildeth over this ground-wall gold, or silver, or precious stones, or tree (wood), straw, or chaff, every man's work shall be manifest. God's day will manifest it, because it shall be revealed in fire, and that fire will prove what each man's work is. If any one's building lasteth through and withstandeth the fire, then receiveth the workman his reward from God for his work. If any one's work burneth up, he hath the harm, and is nevertheless holden through the fire. These words we cannot without great fear expound. By the gold we understand belief and a good conscience; by the silver, right speech, and eloquence, in God's lore; by the precious stones, holy powers; and he who buildeth such works in God's congregation, the fire on doomsday cannot consume his building, because the fire hurteth not the good though it torment the unrighteous. Gold, and silver, and precious stones, are proved in the fire, but nevertheless they are not with the fire consumed. So, also, he who hath good works suffereth not any torture in the broad fire which overgoeth all the earth, but they go through that fire to Christ without *any hurt, as if they went in the sun's brightness. He who builds over the ground-wall, tree, or straw, or chaff, undoubtedly he may know that his work shall in the great fire burn up, and he will have the harm of his work, and will be, nevertheless, holden through the fire. By the tree, and the straw, and the chaff, are betokened light sins, which will be purged by fire, and the workman will have punishment for the work. He will be, nevertheless, purged by the fire, and then he cometh through great difficulty to God's kingdom. Truly he who committeth the capital vices, and in them endeth, he must burn up in the everlasting fire, and thus the heavy sins will never be purged in any fiery conflagration. The homilist subsequently says, Fela synd eac witniendlic stowu the manna sawla for heora gymleaste onthrowiath, be heora gyltu mæthe ær tham gemænlican dome; swa that hi sune beoth fullice geclænsode, and ne thurfon naht throwian on tham foresædan fyre. Many are also the punishing places in which men's souls for their negligence suffer, according to the measure of their faults, ere the common judgment, so that some will be fully cleansed, and have no occasion to suffer anything in the foresaid fire. Thus, the principal purgatorial fire was not expected until the day of judgment, and even upon that remedy great sinners were not to calculate unless they amended before the end of life. But this view of purgatory is not that of modern Romanists, nor does the gloomy prospect offered to the*

of these principles, especially not the latter, in a clear point of view<sup>1</sup>. It is plain, rather, that both were making a stealthy progress, than that either had found a place among evidences of orthodoxy. Thus Elfric, in favouring some traditions which the Council of Trent erected into articles of faith, renders a service at best equivocal. His homilies were manifestly written during a state of transition from one class of doctrines to another: but indications of such a state are far from advantageous to the Romish cause. They fatally undermine that claim to an uninterrupted stream of testimony, in which religious principles, incapable of Scriptural proof, seek support. Such evidence from Elfric's pen also subverts the most cherished opinion of English Romanists: it convicts them of a fond illusion, in identifying their own peculiar system with that of their earliest Christian ancestry. The Saxon homilies countenance, indeed, more or less, various opinions that the reformed Church of England has rejected; but their more inveterate offenders agree with such representations of absolution as have long formed a powerful attraction within the papal church.

<sup>1</sup> Homiletic exhortations to invoke the Blessed Virgin, may be seen in note 21 to Ser. 4, Bampt. Lect. 233. Such an exhortation to invoke St. Laurence is found in p. 238. The homilies most likely are Elfric's; at all events they were produced about his time, and are evidences, therefore, that the practice of invoking departed spirits was then gaining ground. But the Saxon homilies, as may be seen in notes 4 and 5 (p. 216) to that sermon, are far from favourable, upon the whole, to such invocation.

It is perfectly obvious, from them and from liturgies of their time and of earlier dates, as the proofs to that sermon abundantly testify, that not even Anglo-Saxon usage, much less authority, was ever very favourable to any invocation but that of God. None other, indeed, seems to have entered the head of any man until a period but little removed from the Conquest. Johnson, accordingly, observes upon the fifth of the penitential canons, which he would attribute to Dunstan, and which he places under the year 963, "It is evident the fashion of confessing to angels and saints did not yet prevail."

voice upon other distinctive points is Protestant. Upon the whole, they give sufficient reason for asserting, that England, in leaving Rome, regained substantially her ancient faith.

ADDITIONAL NOTE ON ELFRIC.

After this work was finished, it seemed doubtful whether some mention ought not to be made of a formal treatise which takes a view of Elfric's history, different from that in the foregoing pages. The piece is thus entitled: EDWARDI-ROWEI MORESI, de Ælfrico Dorobernensi Archiepiscopo, Commentarius. It was published by Thorkelin, in 1789, Mr. Mores being then dead, and its object is to identify the great Anglo-Saxon author with an archbishop of Canterbury of his name. It maintains that Elfric was educated at Abingdon, under Ethelwold; that he removed with him to Winchester; that he went to Cerne, as all accounts agree; that he was made abbot of St. Albans in 988, bishop of Wilton in the following year, archbishop of Canterbury in 994, and died in 1005. To his residence at Winchester are assigned his Glossary, Monastic Colloquies, Biblical Versions, and Epistle to Wulfstine; to Cerne, his first volume of homilies; to Wilton, the second volume of homilies, and, probably, also his grammar.

Upon these dates, so far as they concern Elfric or Alfric, in the see of Canterbury, there is no material question. Nor is it doubtful that Elfric, the homilist, produced his first volume of homilies, soon after his removal to Cerne, in 987, and his second volume about 991; for he speaks in it of the Danish troubles. But the identity of Elfric the homilist with his namesake the archbishop of Canterbury is anything rather than equally clear. In order to render it probable, Mr. Mores is driven to the necessity of naming Elfric Bata as the author of the Life of Ethelwold and the Epistle to Wulfstan. Chronology forbids the assignment of these to Elfric, archbishop of Canterbury. The hypothesis, therefore, of Mr. Mores, labours under the disadvantage of finding two literary men for works which might have come from one, and apparently did so. It is, besides, only supported by a MS. memorandum, appended to the Glossary and Colloquies, in the Library of St. John's College, Oxford, which claims the credit of several additions to these pieces for Elfric Bata, a disciple of his namesake, the abbot. For attributing to Bata the Life of Ethelwold and the Epistle to Wulfstan, no reason is assigned; yet internal evidence renders it hardly questionable that this epistle came from the same pen that has obliged posterity by the Epistle to Wulfstine. Again, Elfric the homilist introduces his second volume as a monk. He was then, Mr. Mores contends, bishop of Wilton. This difficulty, however, is met by Archbishop Peckham's usage, in the thirteenth century, of styling himself friar, when he was actually filling the see of Canterbury. But such an analogy is too remote for much attention. The light, indeed, in which Elfric's history has been placed by the ingenious author of Anc. Hist. Engl. and Fr. exempl., appeared perfectly satisfactory. By thus identifying this illustrious Anglo-Saxon, a life of about eighty-six years will be assigned to him, and a series of works, not only very similar, but likewise all bearing his name, is referred to a single author.

Mr. Wright (Biog. Brit. Lit. 480,) has followed Mores in considering the great Elfric identical with his namesake, the archbishop of Canterbury. He thus, accordingly, sketches a history for him. His father was earl of Kent. After a preliminary education under a secular priest, he studied under Ethelwold at Abingdon, about 960, and probably went with him from that place to Winchester. In 969, he was made abbot of St. Alban's, but Matthew Paris, it is confessed, gives an account of Abbot Elfric, quite inconsistent with every thing known of his great namesake. Hence it is conjectured, that he really might have remained at Winchester, until 988, or 989, when Elphege sent him to regulate Cerne Abbey, and when he calls himself merely monk and mass-priest. He is then thought to have filled the see of Wilton, but the only known vacancy is that caused by Sigeric's translation to Canterbury, in 989. Now, Elfric sent a volume of homilies to Sigeric, and simply styles himself monk in the dedication to it. This difficulty is met by a reference to Florence of Worcester, who mentions a bishop of Wilton, named Alfstan, in 992. It is thence concluded that Elfric did not immediately succeed Sigeric, at Wilton, but some other prelate, whom existing records scarcely notice, and that, in fact, he held the see of Wilton only during a very short time before Sigeric's death. On that event, he succeeded him at Canterbury, but is called, in the instrument of his election, only a monk of Abingdon. He died Nov. 16, 1006. His Latin grammar, which gained him the title of Grammaticus, is considered to have been written at Winchester, as also the Glossary of Latin words most used in conversation, and the Colloquium, or conversation in Latin with an interlinear Saxon gloss. While at Cerne, he is known to have written the two sets of homilies, and it is considered that he also wrote there the translation of the Heptateuch, the Treatise on the Old and New Testaments, both printed, together with a Treatise on the Trinity, and an Abridgement of Ethelwold's Con- stitutions for the Monks of Eynesham, still only in MS. While bishop of Wilton, he is considered to have written the epistle to Wulfstane, generally styled in collections Ælfric's Canons, and another discourse to the clergy. To Elfric Bata are assigned the Epistle to Wulfstan, and the Life of Ethelwold. But it is admitted that he followed very closely the steps of his master, the great Elfric. The necessity for this admission seems very much to weaken a presumption that the works were produced by two parties instead of one party. The epistles to Wulfstane and Wulfstan have, indeed, every appearance of the same pen. Yet the latter could not have been written by Elfric, archbishop of Canterbury. Nor does it seem at all probable, that Elfric, the homilist, ever was bishop of Wilton, as he must have been, if he be identical with the archbishop of Canterbury. The supposition of some very brief, unnoticed possession of the see of Wilton, which is necessary for this hypothesis, can scarcely be thought satisfactory. Mr. Wright cites Godwin, for Elfric, archbishop of York's patronage, of the secular canons. The great Elfric's works are strongly favourable to the monastic party. But Godwin merely transcribes a brief, and highly unfavourable account of the York Elfric, from William of Malmesbury, and accounts for it by detailing various benefactions of that prelate to foundations for secular canons, while nothing is recorded of his benefactions to monks. Malmesbury's very short and hostile mention of Elfric may, however, be accounted-for quite as probably, by his own eagerness to maintain transubstantiation, and Elfric's ruinous operation upon a belief in it. As for the archbishop's patronage of the seculars, it might be only the tardy justice of an elderly man to some bodies of clergy whom he could not dislodge, and whom he saw in far more favourable colours than the zeal of earlier days had allowed. Upon the whole, therefore, the view of Elfric's history taken in the text of this work may be as probable as any that has yet appeared. Beyond probability nothing is claimed for it. This great man's history still remains a problem that no known means of inquiry can certainly solve. Respecting his name, which is one objection to his identification with the abbot of Peterborough, it may be worth while with adepts in northern philology to consider, whether the final syllable ric, is not equivalent to sige. Both, probably, may mean lord, or chieftain. If so, the great Elfric might occasionally have been called Ælfsige by contemporaries. Elfric, archbishop of Canterbury, is actually named Ælfsius, by Florence of Worcester. (Francof. 1601, p. 198.) The former syllable is written Alf, by Mr. Wright, and others. Nor can any objection be made to this, the Saxon Æ being written A, in the case of King Alfred, as well as often besides. But in other cases, the Saxon diphthong is written E, and this appears more conformable to the Latin usage, and to our general pronunciation. We say Cesar, and not Casar.

A writer in the Edinburgh Review, (Jan. 1838, p. 304, No. CXXXIV.,) disjoins the great Elfric, from his namesake of York, chiefly because the latter is called by Malmesbury and others, præpositus Wintoniensis, which is considered as meaning that he was prior of Winchester, the bishop being really the abbot. In most cases this translation would be quite satisfactory, and would sufficiently identify the party. But in the very brief and confused accounts connected with the great name of Elfric, such language, in the face of much inconsistent matter, cannot be esteemed conclusive. The homilist and epistolary writer was undoubtedly a monastic superior, and educated at Winchester. From these facts alone the designation may have been bestowed.

It should be added, perhaps, that those who cite Elfric's invaluable testimony against Romish opinions, ought to remark the challenge of inquiry into the soundness of his doctrine with which he introduces both volumes of homilies. That these challenges were not idly given, we are sufficiently assured; for an archbishop of Canterbury approved the books. Dr. Lingard, who labours to discredit them in the notes (Note M.) to his Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church, certainly does not make his case any the stronger by espousing the prevailing opinion that Elfric himself became archbishop of Canterbury, immediately after these homilies were published and authorized. According to this hypothesis, Elfric sent one volume of homilies to Sigeric, or Siricius, about 987, another about 991, inviting a strict inquiry into the soundness of both, and was himself the successor of Siricius in 994. If such be the facts, they are pretty decisive against English belief in transubstantiation, at that time of the day. As for the intellectual inferiority of Elfric's age to that of a former period, which Dr. Lingard maintains, let it be remembered that this was the very age of Dunstan and Ethelwold. A Romish advocate would laud the great luminary of such an age to the skies—if he had not overthrown the main distinctive article of Romish belief.

---

CHAPTER V.

MISCELLANEOUS PARTICULARS.

GOD'S OFFER OF SALVATION TO CHRISTIANS REPRESENTED AS UNIVERSAL—PRACTICE ESTEEMED THE ONLY TEST OF RELIGIOUS SINCERITY—GOD'S LIKENESS TO BE FOUND IN THE HUMAN SOUL—NATURE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH—POPULAR EXPOSITIONS OF THE LORD'S PRAYER AND THE CREED ENJOINED—APOCRYPHAL LEGENDS—RESPECT FOR SUNDAY—FESTIVALS AND FASTS—ABSTINENCE FROM STRANGLERED FOOD AND BLOOD—EPISCOPAL ELECTIONS—NO PROFESSION OF OBEDIENCE TO ROME REQUIRED FROM BISHOPS—NOR OF BELIEF IN TRANSUBSTANTIATION—BISHOPS AND ABBOTS MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL LEGISLATURE—BISHOPS CONCURRENT JUDGES IN THE COUNTY COURTS—EPISCOPAL SEES—EPISCOPAL PRECEDENCE AND VISITATIONS—ORDINATION AND DUTIES OF PRIESTS—ANXIETY TO KEEP THEM UNMARRIED—SEVEN ORDERS OF ECCLESIASTICS—DIFFERENT KINDS OF MONKS—REGULATIONS RESPECTING THEM—ECCLESIASTICAL IMMUNITIES—GUILDSHIPS OR SODALITIES—CORONATION COMPACT—BAPTISM—MARRIAGE—SECOND MARRIAGES—WAKES—DEDICATION OF CHURCHES—RELIGIOUS ARCHITECTURE—ORGANS—ORDEALS—TRUCE OF THE CHURCH—LUSTRAL WATER AND CHRISM USED AS CHARMS—THE PENITENTIAL SYSTEM—ANGLO-SAXON SAINTS—ANGLO-SAXON VERSIONS OF SCRIPTURE—CONCLUSION.

For the convenience of making a distinction, apparently, Englishmen have long spelt and pronounced differently the words God and good. Anglo-Saxon documents offer no such difference to the eye; nor, possibly, did Anglo-Saxon speech make any such fall upon the ear. The great Creator might seem to have been known emphatically as the Good, a happy designation, at once expressive of his own most endearing attribute, and of his people's thankfulness. With equal felicity of expression, it must be mournfully acknowledged, was our Anglo-Norman ancestry contented to signify humanity and wickedness by the same word. Man meant indifferently either'. In strict conformity with a name so appropriately found for the Great First Cause, were Anglo-Saxon views of his moral governance. All Christians were encouraged in believing themselves to have received an offer of salvation. The health of every soul was represented as the desire of God<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> "Obiter hic notandum, vocem God apud Anglo-Saxones, et Deum significasse et Bonum: uti Man, et Hominem, et Nequitiam." (LYE. in voce, Man.) Junius says in his glossary to the Gothic gospels, "Unicum ac summum bonum, DEUS OPTIMUS MAXIMUS, Goth, dicitur." The Gothic root of Man, wickedness, (Angl.-Sax.) does not appear to be extant in the gospels of Ulphilas. That word occurs in the Anglo-Saxon, (Mar. vii. 22,) answering to πονηρία, the wickedness, of our authorized version, but the corresponding Gothic word is Unseleins, evidently a negative form from Sel, good. Mr. Kemble (Gent. Mag. July, 1835, p. 27,) derives the Saxon, Man, wickedness, from the Gothic, Mains, with the same signification, and considers Goth, or Guth, God, not as the neuter of Gods, good, but as an independent noun. Upon this view, Junius and Lye are mistaken.

<sup>2</sup> Drihten us mid swa micelre lufan lufath, he wilnath thæt we ealle hale synd and gesund, and to thære sothan hreowe gecyrran, and to tham sothan andgyte his godcundnesse. Drihten wile thæt ure lif sy gestathelod on clænnesse and on sothfæstnesse: nell he thæt se synfulla mann on his synnum thurh-wunige, and æfter his deathe on ecum witum swelte. Ac he wile thæt we in thisse lænan tide gecearnien thæt we on ece nesse ne forwurthan. Se ar-festa Drihten and se mildheorta ne biddath he æt us gold ne seolf, ne nænig woruld gestreon; ac he wilnath thæt we clænsien ure sawla, and ure lichaman; thæt we magon heo him swa clæne agyfan swa he hi us ær clæne befæste. Menn tha leofestan we sceolon mid monig-fealdum godum ure sawla clænsian; mid fæstenum, and mid wældes-deadum, and clænum gebedum; forthon se monn se gelomlice to Drihtene clypath, thonne brecth he deofles megn, and his costnunge him fram afleneth.—(Hom. De Letaniâ Major. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 22.) The Lord with so great love us loveth, he desireth that we all be hale and sound, and turn to true repentance, and to true understanding of his divinity. The Lord desireth that our life be established in cleanness (purity) and in truth: he will not that the sinful man in his sins continue, and after his death in everlasting punishments die. But he desires that we, in this lean (frail or transitory) tide, earn that we for ever do not perish. The gracious Lord and the mild-hearted, asketh he not of us gold, nor silver, nor any worldly gain; but he desireth that

Nor were gloomy forebodings awakened in any believing mind, unless an irreligious life denied the conscience peace.

When the Author of all goodness is thus attractively displayed, a serious mind inclines irresistibly to love him. Such an inclination might, however, merely generate a transient glow, productive neither of individual amelioration, nor of honour to the Church. Wisely, therefore, for the ripening of heavenly seed, were the Anglo-Saxons taught distrust in any barren impulse, however warm and creditable. Men might please themselves in observing their hearts approach to a healthier, religious tone, and not unreasonably. Would they please God, also, Anglo-Saxon divinity bade them to remember that virtuous actions must prove their feelings energetic, no less than sound<sup>1</sup>. Thus were congregations guarded against illusions from a sanguine temperament and an enthusiastic brain; holy affections were tried by the sober-minded test of moral lives; men were warned against reckoning either upon their own love to God or upon the love from him indispensable for their wants, while the habits bore no

---

we cleanse our soul and our body; that we may give it up to him as clean as he committed it ere clean to us. Men, the most beloved, we should with manifold goods our souls cleanse; with fastings and with alms-deeds, and with clean prayers; for the man who constantly calleth to the Lord, then breaketh he the devil's main (power), and his temptation from him putteth to flight.

<sup>1</sup> Uton we nu, forthon, men tha leofestan, neoman sibbe and lufe us betweonan; forthan on tham

bith eall Drihtnes bebod mæst. Uton neoman clænnesse, and gesceadwisnesse ealra godra weorca; forthon buton thæm ne mæg nan man Gode lician.—(Hom. De Letaniâ Majore. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 22.) Come we now, then, men the most beloved, let us take peace and love among ourselves; for in them is the greatest of all God's commandments. Come, let us take cleanness and regard for good works; for without them no man can please God.

witness to a change. Until this difficulty was overcome, all claims to the love of God were branded as nothing better than false pretences<sup>1</sup>.

To the soundness of such divinity sensible men will ordinarily yield immediate assent. Nor do they overlook, when sunk in serious thought, the difficulty of thus attesting trustworthy principles. From this insight into their danger, and into their natural incompetence to overcome it, religious minds draw humility and aspirations after heavenly aid. Anglo-Saxon teachers inculcated, accordingly, the need of both. A proud heart was represented as fatal to the hope of divine assistance, and this latter as indispensable for establishing the soul in health<sup>2</sup>. It was to that

<sup>1</sup> Eft cwæth se Hælend to his leorning-cnihtum; Se the me lufath he hyllt min bebod, and min Fæder hine lufath for thære gehyrsumnisse, and wyt cumath him to, and him mid wuniath. Gehyrath, mine gebrothra, hwæt se Hælend cwæth: Se the me lufath he hyllt min bebod. Thære lufe fandung is thæs weorces fremming. Iohannes, se apostol, eac be thysum cwæth: Gif hwa cwylth thæt he lufige thone lufigendan God, and his beboda ne hyllt, byth leas thonne. Sothlice we lufiath thone leofan Drihten, gif we ure unthearfas geemnyttath be his hæsum, and ure wohnisse be his wordum gerihtath, and thurk unlustas his lufe ne withcwethath.—(Hom. De Dilectione Dei et Proximi. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 23.) Then quoth the Healer to his learning-knights (disciples): He that loveth me, he holds my bidding, and my Father loveth him for the obedience, and we two come to him, and dwell with him. Hear, my brethren, what the Healer quoth: He that loveth me, he holds my bidding. The love's proof is the work's effect. Iohannes, the apostle, also of this quoth: If any one quoth that he loveth the loving God, and his bidding hold not, he is a liar then. Truly we love the beloved Lord, if we our ill-manners adjust by his commands, and our errors by his words correct, and through what displeases him, his love do not gainsay.

<sup>2</sup> Dena getacniath tha eadmodan, duna tha modigan. On Drihtenes to-cyme wurdon dena afyllede, and duna geeadmete, swa swa he sylf cwæth: Ælc thæra the hine onhefth biþ eadnet, and se the hine geeadmet biþ geuferod. Swa swa wæter shyt of thære dune, and eft stent on dene, swa swa forflith se Halga Gast modigra manna heortan, and nimeth wununge on tham eadmodum.—(Hom. in Nativ. Sci Ioh. Bapt. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii.

invisible part to which the words of Moses were applied, when he speaks of man as originally created in the image of God<sup>1</sup>. When human aims, therefore, were directed by the divine perfections, men were only striving to regain what they had been taught to consider as integral portions of their proper nature. Adam's fall, however, they were informed had enslaved the will. This had been originally free in every sense of that word. It was now warped by a constitutional bias towards iniquity; hence nothing short of divine interposition offered a hope of such courses as judgment and conscience would approve<sup>2</sup>.

24.) Valleys betoken the humble, mountains the proud. At the Lord's advent were valleys filled up and mountains levelled, even as he himself quoth: Every one of those who exalt themselves shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Even as water shoots off the mountain, and then stands in the valley, even so fleeth the Holy Ghost proud men's hearts, and taketh a dwelling in the humble.

Nu behofath ure freedom æfre Godes fulltume, forthan the we ne doth nan god butan Godes fulltume.—(Hom. in Letaniâ Majore. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Julius. E. 7. f. 83.) Now needeth our freedom ever God's aid, for we do no good without God's aid.

Næflh ure nannan leoht ænigre godnysse, buton of Cristes gife, se the is sothre rihtwisnysse sunne gehaten.—(Ib. Titus. D. 27. f. 54.) None of us hath any light of any goodness but of Christ's gift, who is called the sun of true righteousness.

<sup>1</sup> Her ge magon gehyran tha

halgan Thrynesse, and sothe Annesse, anre Godcundnesse. Uton nyrkan mannan: thær is seo halge Thrynnys: To ure anlicnesse: thær is seo Annys: To anre anlicnesse, na to thrym anlicnessum. On thes mannes sawle is Godes anlicnes; forthan is se man selra thonne tha saullessan nytenu, the nan andgyt nabbath embe heora agenne Scyppend.—(Hom. 15. De Exameron, thæt is BE GODES SIX DAGA WEORCUM. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 24. p. 276.) Here ye may hear the Holy Trinity and the true Unity in one Divinity. Come let us make man: there is the holy Trinity: To our likeness: there is the Unity: To one likeness, not to three likenesses. In man's soul is the likeness of God; therefore is man better than the soul-less cattle, which have no understanding about their own Creator.

<sup>2</sup> Hwæt is agen-cyre? Hwæt is frigdom to gecosan god oththe ufel? Thone frigdom hæfde man on Neorænewange: ac nu is se fridom getheowtod; for se man

Although the Anglo-Saxons ever viewed Rome with filial deference, their definitions of the Church do not harmonise with those which controversial necessities eventually extorted from papal divines. Their simple and unexceptionable treatment of this question differs, in fact, little or nothing substantially, from that which appears in the Thirty-nine Articles<sup>1</sup>. Thus in this, as in many other instances, the religious antiquities of England bear a gratifying testimony to the soundness of the discretion that guided her Reformation.

A Latin liturgy naturally made the Anglo-Saxons partial to that language even in their offices of domestic piety. The Lord's Prayer, the creeds, and other devotional pieces were, indeed, rendered into the vernacular tongue. Nor was there any reason why individuals, worshipping God at home, should have used them under the disguise of a foreign idiom. But public solemnities take a powerful hold upon imagination, and human weakness is prone to invest with a mysterious potency ne can nan god, but God thurh his geofe him tæce. Ne tha get ne mæig he hit geforthigen, bute God him fylste thærto.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Vespasian. D. 14. f. 157.) What is free will? What is freedom to choose good or evil? The freedom had man in Paradise: but now is the freedom enslaved; for man can do no good, unless God, through his gift, him teach. Nor, then, can he go on with it, unless God aid him thereto.

---

<sup>1</sup> "The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure word of God is preached, and the Sacraments be duly administered, in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same."—(Art. XIX.)

Upon St. Matth. xi. 12, a Saxon homily says, Godes rice is gecweden on thisre stowe, seo halige gelathung, that is, eall Cristen folc.—(In Nativ. Scī Joh. Bapt. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 24. f. 29.) God's kingdom is called in this place, the holy congregation, that is, all Christian folk. In another homily, we find, Leofan men, we gelyfath thæt halig gelathung sy ealra Cristena manna to anum rihtan geleafan.—(De Fide. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 99. f. 13.) Beloved men, we believe the holy congregation to be the body of Christian men with one right faith.

such religious forms as are ordinarily unintelligible. Hence, clergymen were enjoined, as an especial duty, to supply popular expositions of the Lord's Prayer and Creed<sup>1</sup>. Men, it was intimated, ought to know what was the purport of their prayers, and what were the articles of their belief. How forcibly do such intimations rebuke the usage of making religion speak an unknown tongue!

As Anglo-Saxon divines lived long before the revival of sound criticism, they were naturally prone to admit hasty views of Scripture and apocryphal tales. They teach, accordingly, that Elias is reserved alive for a solemn appearance upon earth; when Antichrist has gained his destined ascendancy, immediately before the final consummation. Then, he is to bear an unavailing testimony against ungodliness and suffer martyrdom<sup>2</sup>. Christ's death, it was also believed, affected a most important deliverance for the first pair, and the good of former times. All these had hitherto languished in the infernal regions; but Jesus descended to them, and domes, oththæt Drihten asende hine æft hider on middan-earde, æt woruldes ende, thæt he sceal thenne secgæn and cuthæn moncynne Godes lare, and his martyrdom for Cristes lufæ throwæn on Antecristes dagum.—(Bibl. Bodl. MSS. BODLEY, 343. f. 162.) Elias never yet suffered death, but he is yet in the body living in the place where God hath set him; and he shall there happily abide his martyrdom, until the Lord send him away hereafter hither on earth, at the world's end, that he should then tell and testify to mankind God's lore, and undergo his martyrdom for Christ's love, in Antichrist's days.

---

<sup>1</sup> Se lareow sceal secgan tham læwedum mannum thæt andgit to tham Pater nre, and tham Credan, thæt hi witon hwæt hi biddath æt Gode, and hu hi sceolon on God gelyfan.—(Hom. in Cap. Jejunii. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Julius. E. 7. f. 65.) The teacher should tell to the lay people, the meaning of the Pater n̄r, and the Creed, that they know what they pray of God, and how they should in God believe.

<sup>2</sup> Elias næfre gyt death ne tholode, ac he is gyt on lichame libbende on tham stowe the God him hæfth isæt; and he sceal thær abidæn sundfullice his martyr-

on departing carried them away in his train, leaving impenitent spirits to brood in gloomy despair over augmented horrors reserved for the day of judgment<sup>1</sup>. Paradise was represented as a delightful abode miraculously suspended between heaven and earth<sup>2</sup>. A proof of the body's resurrection was rather strangely sought in the legend of the Seven Sleepers. Certain individuals, thus designated, being said to have awakened

<sup>1</sup> Ure Hælend Crist tobræc helle gatu, and generode Adam and Euan, and his gecorenan on heora cynne, and freolice of death aras, and hi samod, and astah to heofonum. Tha manfullan he let bæstan to tham ecum witum, and ic nu helle gat belocen rihtwisum mannum, and æfre open unrihtwisum.— (Hom. in die Dom. Pasch. p. 294. Bibl. Publ. Cant. MSS. 9 i. 4—6.) Our Healer, Christ, brake hell's gates, and delivered Adam and Eva, and his chosen of their kind, and freely from death arose, and they with him, and ascended to heaven. The wicked he left behind, to everlasting punishments; and now is hell's gate locked against righteous men, and ever open to unrighteous. Another of these legendary statements is worthy of notice, because it is at variance with the chronology now commonly received. Thæt wæs Frigedæg thæt hi tha blæde thigdon, Adam and Eua, and hi eft swulton on Frigedæg; and tha eft æfter thon thæt hi butu wæron on helle, Adam and Eua, for thæs gyltes mycelnesse, fif thusend wintra, and twa hund wintra, ær thon heom God gemildsian wolde, and heom thæs wræces unbindan.— (Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Tiberius. A. 3. f. 41.) It was Friday that they ate the fruit, Adam and Eva, and they afterwards died on Friday; and after that they both were in hell, Adam and Eva, for the guilt's greatness, five thousand winters, and two hundred winters, ere that God would have mercy on them, and release them from his vengeance.

<sup>2</sup> Sc̅s Johannes gesch ofer garseg swilce hit an land wære. Tha genam hine se ængel and gebrohte hine to Neorxnwange. Neorxnwange nis nather on heofene, ne on eorthe. Seo boc sægth thæt Noes flod wæs feowrtig fedmen heh ofer tha hegesta dunen the on middan-earde synden, and Neorxnenwange is feowrtig fedme herre thonne Noes flod wæs; and hit hangeth betwonen heofon and eorden wunderlice.— (Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Vespasian. D. 14. f. 163.) Sc̅s Johannes saw over the ocean as if it were land. Then the angel took him, and brought him to Paradise. Paradise is neither in heaven, nor in earth. The book saith, that Noe's flood was forty fathoms high over the highest mountains that are on earth, and Paradise is forty fathoms higher than Noe's flood was; and it hangeth between heaven and earth wonderfully.

from a trance of nearly four centuries, it was inferred that the possibility of a general resurrection had been thereby completely established<sup>1</sup>. A more philosophical age would have seen the fallacy or reasoning from a case in which the more active bodily functions were merely suspended, to one in which the body itself was wholly decomposed.

A similar credulity lent force to exhortations for the strict observance of Sunday. Against desecration of that holy day numerous legislative acts made a wise and honourable provision<sup>2</sup>. Minds, however, impressed but slightly by religion, find a temptation, almost irresistible, to encroach upon it by business or amusement. Hence an Anglo-Saxon homily circulated a legend, representing legal and customary restrictions for guarding the sanctity of Sunday as express revelations from arose from the earth alive; because Christ would manifest to the emperor that we all shall rise from death at the last day to meet our Lord, and receive the reward of all our deeds, according to that we ere wrought in this world.

<sup>1</sup> Us secgath eac bec swa swa hit full soth is, thæt tha seofon slæperas the slepon on tham timan fram Decies dagum, thæs deofellican caseres, oth Theodosies timan, the on Drihten gelyfde, threo hund geara fæc and twa and hund seofontig geara, thæt hi tha upp-arison on thære eorþan acucode; forþan the Criste wolde tham casere gesnutelian thæt we ealle sceolon of deathe arisan on tham endnextan dæge urum Drihtene togeanes, and underfon edlean calra ure dæda, be tham the we ær geworhton on thissere worulde.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Vitellius. C. 5. f. 95.) Us tell us also books, even as it full true is, that the seven sleepers, who slept at a time, from Decie's days, the devilish emperor, to Theodosie's time, who believed in the Lord, three hundred and seventy-two years' space, that they then up-

<sup>2</sup> Ina's legislation for Sunday has already been particularized. This was repeated at Berghamstead. The fourteenth canon of the council of Cloveshoo, forbids journeys to ecclesiastics, unless absolutely necessary, on Sundays.—(SPELM. i. 249. WILK. i. 96.) Athelstan imposed heavy penalties on Sunday-trading.—(SPELM. i. 400. WILK. i. 207.) At Eanham, hunting on Sundays was forbidden.—(SPELM. i. 518. WILK. i. 288.) This, with the other prohibitions, Canute repeated.—SPELM. i. 546. WILK. i. 303.

Heaven. Christians at Antioch were said to have become very remiss in hallowing the Lord's day. An angel was therefore despatched to one Peter, then bishop there, for the purpose of detailing the claims of piety's own day to especial veneration, and of enjoining the manner of its observance<sup>1</sup>. This heavenly messenger is made to crowd into the sacred day a very large proportion of those incidents that most interest religious minds. Anglo-Saxon usage consecrated to devotion the whole space of time from three o'clock on Saturday afternoon to day-light on Monday morning<sup>2</sup>. Within this interval, it was represented, God created the soul of man. To the Lord's day were assigned also the passage of Israel through the Red Sea, the miraculous fall of manna, the birth of Christ, his change of water into wine, his baptism, and his wonderful repast to the five thousand<sup>3</sup>. His rise from the

<sup>1</sup> Tha asende se Ælmihtiga God an ærend-ge writ ufan of heofonan be anum halgan engle, to anum bisceope, se hatte Petrus, se was biscop on Antiochia thære burh, thær thær Scs Petrus, se apostol, ærest gesæt his biscop-sell: on tham gewrite stod eall be thæs dæges halignesse.—(Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 489. f. 25. SERMO AD POPVLVM DOMINICIS DIE-BVS.) Then sent Almighty God an epistle from heaven above, by a holy angel, to a bishop named Petrus, who was bishop in the city of Antiochia, where Scs Petrus, the apostol, erst set his bishop's see; in the writing stood all about the day's holiness.

<sup>2</sup> This custom of keeping eves appears to have been adopted from the Jewish practice. Among that nation it was ancient, as is evident from Judith, viii. 6. The homily thus enjoins it, assuming the person of God:  Ic beode that men healdan thone Drihtenlican dæg fram eallum theowellicum weorcum: that is, fram Sæternes-dæges none, oth Monan-dæges lihtinge. I bid that men keep the Lord's day from all servile works: that is, from Saturn's-day noon (ninth hour, reckoned from six in the morning) to Monday's dawn. Legislative penalties reserved all this space of time for religion so early as the council of Berghamstead, in 697.—SPELM. i. 195. WILK. i. 60.

<sup>3</sup> Eac on tham dæge he gesceop manna sawla, and tha tha Moyses, se heretoga, lædde Godes folc of Egipta lande, tha on tham dæge he hit lædde ofen tha Readan sæ, swa thæt he sloh mid anre gyrde

dead and the great day of Pentecost are naturally commemorated in this imposing catalogue. Another powerful claim for the consecration of Sunday is founded on the general judgment, which, it is asserted, will crown the various most remarkable distinctions of that holy day<sup>1</sup>. God is accordingly represented as insisting upon on tha sæ, and heo to-eode on twa, and that folc for betwux tham twammwæterum on tham grunde ealle drig-sceode, oth hi comon to tham lande up: and on tham dæge com ærest seo heofonlica mete ufan of heofonum tham ylcan folce to bilyfan, and God hi mid tham affedde XL. wintra on tham westene the hi to-foron, and seo mete hatte manna: and on tham dæge was Crist, thæs lifigendan Godes sunu, geboren of Sca̅ Marian innothe, soth man eal swa he is soth God, middanearde to alysanne of deofles anwealde, the his ær geweald ahte for Adames gylte: and syththan he acenned wæs, he awende on tham dæge wæter to wine; and on tham dæge he wæs gefullod: and on tham dæge he gereordade æt anum mæle (obliterated) thusend manna of fif berenum hlafum—(obliterated) fixum, syththan he hæfde thone bilyfan mid heofoncundlicre bletsunga tham ylcan dæge gebletsod, and tha tha hi ealle fulle wæron, tha bær man up of than the hi læfdon twelf leapas fulle.—(Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 489. f. 26.) Also on that day he created man's soul; and when Moyses, the leader, led God's folk from Egypt's land, then on that day he led them over the Red Sea, after he smote with a wand on the sea, and it went in twain, and the people went between the two waters on the ground all dryshod, until they came to the land up: and on that day, came erst the heavenly meat from heaven above for the same folk's food, and God fed them with it XL. winters in the wilderness that they travelled through, and the meat was called manna: and on that day was Christ, the living God's Son, born of Sca̅ Maria's womb, true man as he is true God, the world to release from the devil's power, who ere possessed the power of it from Adam's guilt: and after he was born, he turned, on that day, he was baptized: and on that day he refreshed at one meal — thousand men from five barley loaves — fishes, after he had the food with heavenly blessing on the same day blessed, and when they all were full, then were borne up from that which they left twelve baskets full.

<sup>1</sup> On tham dæge wyrd middan-eard eall geendad; and on tham dæge cymath God to demanne eallum mancynne, ælcum be his agenum gemyrhtum.—(Ib.) On that day will the earth be all ended; and on that day cometh God to judge all mankind, every man according to his own works. Se Sunnan-dæg is se forma dæg ealra dagena, and he bith se endenyhsta æt thysere worulde ende.—(Ib. f. 27.) Sunday is the first day of all days, and it will be the last at this world's end.

a rigid observance of it. His angelic messenger forbids all trafficking on Sundays, all exercise of an artisan's trade, all such household cares as are not necessarily of daily recurrence; and he even interdicts the barber from obeying a summons for assistance. Any transgressor of these restrictions, it was declared, God would treat as an outlaw, denying him his blessing, and reserving for him his wrath<sup>1</sup>.

Besides the Lord's day, conciliar authority enjoined the celebration of all such festivals in honour of saints as were established in the Roman martyrologies<sup>2</sup>. In process of time English saints made new calls upon the national devotion. It was, however, impressed upon the minds of men, that such services, although in honour of religion's brightest ornaments, were merely commemorative. To God himself the service was really addressed<sup>3</sup>. Upon the public generally these demands

<sup>1</sup> Swa hwa swa ænige cypinge on tham dæge begaeth, oththe othre thæt thæt man clathas wæxe, oththe ænig cræftig-man him on his cræfte tylige, oththe man efesige othere man, oththe bread bæce, oththe ænig ungelufed thing bega on tham dæge, he scel beon utlaga with me, and calle tha him to tham unrihte fylstath, and him gethafiath: for than tha men the swiþc thing begaeth ne begyath hi na mine bletsunge ne mine myltse, ac heom becynth færlice min grama ofer for thæs dæges forsewennysse.— (Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 489. f. 28.) Whoever any dealing on that day exerciseth, or washeth clothes, or any artisan that works at his craft, or a man who trims the hair of another, or bakes bread, or plies any unallowed thing on that day, he shall be an outlaw with me, and

all who aid him in the wrong, and approve him: for men who ply such things do not get my blessing or my mercy, but upon them cometh suddenly my wrath for the day's contempt.

<sup>2</sup> Conc. Clovesh. can. 13. SPELM. i. 249. WILK. i. 96.

<sup>3</sup> “Festivitates scōrum apostolorum seu martyrum antiqui patres in venerationis misterio celebrari sanxerunt, vel ad excitandam imitationem, vel ut meritis eorum consociemur atque orationibus adjuvemur: ita tamen ut nulli martyrum sed ipsi Deo martyrum sacrificemus; quamvis in memoriã martyrum constituamus altaria. Nemo enim Antistitum in locis sanctorum corporum assistens altari aliquando dixit offerimus tibi, Petre, aut Paule, aut Cypriane, sed quid offertur, offer-

for pious exercises appear to have been far less numerous than they eventually became. It was, probably, monks and ecclesiastics only who were expected to vary their year by all the commemorative offices of the Roman calendar. Upon the week-day time of laymen the claim for festivals appears to have been merely for the holiday-seasons of Easter, Whitsuntide, and Christmas; for two days in honour of the Virgin; for one day in honour of St. Peter and St. Paul; and for single days in honour of the archangel Michael, of the Baptist, of the saints Martin and Andrew, and of the Epiphany; together with such martyrs or confessors as should be interred in that particular diocese which contained the party's residence<sup>1</sup>. English authorities also thought themselves bound by the ties of national gratitude to prescribe festivals in honour of Gregory and Augustine<sup>2</sup>.

tur Deo qui martyres coronavit."
—Ex codice MS. C. C. C. C. apud
HICKES, Thes. ii. 148.

<sup>1</sup> De Festivitatibus Anni. "Festos dies in anno celebrare sancimus: hoc est diem dominicum pasche cum omni honore et sobrietate venerari: similis modo tamen ebdomadam illam observare decrevimus: Die ascensionis dñi pleniter celebrare in pentecosten similiter ut in pascha: In natale ap̄lorum Petri et Pauli dñe unum: nativitatem sc̄i Iohannis baptistæ: assumptionem sc̄e Mariæ. Dedicacionem sc̄i Michaelis: natale sc̄i Martini et sc̄i Andree: in natale dñi dies iiii: Octavas dñi: Epiphania dñi: purificatio sc̄e Mariæ, et illus festivitates martirum vel confessorum observare decrevimus quorum in unaquaque parrochiâ sc̄a corpora requiescunt."—(Brit.

Mus. MSS. Cotton, Tiberius. A. 3. f. 165.) Wanley pronounces the MS. from which this extract has been made, anterior to the Conquest.—HICKES, Thes. ii. 192.

<sup>2</sup> Conc. Clovesh. can. 17. SPELM. i. 256. WILK. i. 97. The 18th of King Alfred's laws allows twelve days at Christmas, the day of Christ's victory over the devil, St. Gregory's day, St. Peter and St. Paul's day, All Saints' day, Passion week, the Easter week, and a full week before St. Mary's mass, in harvest.—(SPELM. i. 370. WILK. i. 194.) The St. Mary's mass mentioned, is that for the feast of the assumption, or supposed bodily ascent of the Virgin into heaven, Aug. 15. Johnson considers the day of Christ's victory over the devil to be either Ascension-day, or the first Sunday in Lent.

Besides these calls to blend religion with festivity, the Anglo-Saxon Church prescribed regular pious exercises of a different character. Every Friday, unless it happened to be a festival, was to be solemnized by fasting. It was the same with the eve of every festival, except that of St. Philip and St. James. This saint's day was always near the joyous time of Easter. Hence the Church was unwilling then to insist upon any fast, but left such a mode of celebrating the eve optional with individuals<sup>1</sup>. The great fasts were four in number, one in every quarter of the year. These were distinguished as legitimate fasts, and were ordinarily observed with considerable rigour. Every person above twelve years of age was then required to abstain from food until nones, or three in the afternoon<sup>2</sup>. These four seasons of religious abstinence were also called ember weeks, from the Saxon word signifying a circuit,

<sup>1</sup> Conc. Eanh. SPELM. i. 518. WILK. i. 288.

<sup>2</sup> "Primum legitimum ieiuniū erit in primā ebdomadâ quadragesimâ. Sēdm̄ autem in ebdomadâ pentecosten. Sive ebdomadâ post pentecosten. Tertium autē in ebdomadâ plenâ ante equinoctiū autumpnale. Quartū autē in ebdomadâ plenâ ante natale dñi nr̄i ih̄u xp̄i."—(Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 99.) This is from an ancient calendar at the beginning of the MS., written, as it appears, by a monk and priest, named Édric, who died 9 Kal. Dec.; but the year is not mentioned. The calculations, however, are made to the year 1119.

Fæstath eower lencten fæsten rihtlice to nones, ælc man the beo ofer XII. wintre, and tha feower ymbrenu on twelf monthu, the for rihtlice asette synd, and thæra haligra mæsse-æfenas the for Cristes lufon martyrdom throwedon.—(Ex Hom. intitul. Her is halwendlic Lar: Here is wholesome Lore: in eod. cod. f. 68.) Fast your lenten fast rightly to nones, every man that is over XII. winters, and the four embrens in the twelve months, which are rightly set for you, and the mass-evens of the saints who for Christ's love suffered martyrdom.

The Russians, like our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, regularly keep four great fasts, viz., Lent; St. Peter's fast, from the Monday after Whit-Sunday, to June 29; the Virgin Mary's fast, from Aug. 1, to Aug. 15; St. Philip's fast, from Nov. 15, to Dec. 26.—PINKERTON'S Russia, 72.

or course. Of this adaptation the meaning is obvious,—in the course of every year these fasts regularly recurred<sup>1</sup>.

Anglo-Saxon prejudices appear never to have been relaxed upon the subject of such aliments as the most venerable of councils, that of Jerusalem, had forbidden<sup>2</sup>. Although Jewish prejudices no longer needed conciliation, yet this was apparently quite overlooked. Ecclesiastical authorities implicitly followed Egbert's example in prohibiting the tasting of blood<sup>3</sup> or of strangled ani-

<sup>1</sup> As embering and ember still occur in our Prayer-books, and occasionally elsewhere, various speculations upon the precise meaning of the term have been entertained among observers of language unacquainted with Saxon. It comes from ymb, the Greek ἀμφὶ, about, and ryne, a run. Some have hastily derived it from embers, meaning the ashes, anciently used on Ash-Wednesday; but Somner (in voc. Ymbren) very well observes, that this usage was confined to one day in the whole four seasons. Some questions and answers upon these four fasts, with various fanciful reasons for their observance, from the pen of Egbert, may be seen in WILKINS, Conc. i. 85.

<sup>2</sup> Acts xv. 29.

<sup>3</sup> Riht is thæt ænig Cristen man blod ne thycge.—(Sinodal. Decret. 53. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 121. f. 29.) Right is that any Christian man take not blood.

We cythath eow that God Ælmihtig cwæth his agenum muthe thæt nan man he mot abyrgan nanes cynes blod, ne fugeles, ne nytenes, the eow alyfed is thæt flæsc to nyttienne. Ælc thæra

the abyrgth blod, ofer Godes bebod, sceal forwurthan on ecenysse.—(Ex Hom. intitul. Her is halwendlic Lar. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 99. f. 68.) We tell you that God Almighty quoth by his own mouth, that no man may taste any kind of blood, neither fowl's, nor cattle's, whose flesh is allowed you to enjoy. Every one who tastes blood against God's command, shall perish for ever.

It appears, from the 31st canon of Egbert's Penitential (WILK. i. 121), that women sometimes took the blood of their husbands as a medicine. This usage was, probably, founded on some old heathen superstition, and popular credulity was likely to gather strength from ecclesiastical prohibition.

In Egbert's 38th canon (Ib. 123) is given an express permission for the eating of horse-flesh, and of hares (the Saxon word for which, though almost identical with the modern English, is strangely rendered halices by Wilkins). From such permissions, it seems hardly doubtful that some people scrupled about the eating of anything that was Levitically unclean. The same canon, inmals<sup>1</sup>. A legal defilement was attributed even to the water into which such substances had fallen<sup>2</sup>. In the Penitentials, accordingly, are provided penances appor- tioned to all these breaches of the ceremonial law, whether accidental or otherwise. It is this peculiarity which has made many regard certain canonical sanctions, occurring in Anglo-Saxon monuments, as irresistibly ludicrous. Readers have been unable to contain their laughter, on encountering grave denunciations against water that had come into contact with a dead mouse or weasel. Those who think, however, of Mosaic prohibitions and the council of Jerusalem, will recognise in such peculiarities interesting links connecting modern times with ancient. It was owing, probably, to Theodore of Tarsus<sup>3</sup> that these Asiatic restrictions were enjoined so rigidly by the Anglo-Saxon Church, and her deference for his authority remained unshaken to the last.

As this venerable community, like other ancient churches, was happily connected with apostolic times by an episcopal polity, sufficient care impressed laical apprehensions with a due perception of this essential feature in religious discipline. Opulence was, indeed, deed, enjoins, that even water, into which a little pig had fallen, should be sprinkled with holy water and fumigated with incense before use. It allows, however, expressly the eating of unclean animals in cases of necessity.

---

<sup>1</sup> Pœn. Egb. Anc. LL. and Inst. of Engl. ii. 215.

<sup>2</sup> Egb. Pœn. cann. 39, 40. WILK. i. 123. 124. From the latter of these two canons, it appears that scruples were entertained about the eating of swine which had eaten carrion, or sucked up human blood. Egbert goes no further than to say, We believe that they nevertheless are not to be cast away; but he adds, that they cannot be used until they are clean.

<sup>3</sup> Theodore is cited in the 39th canon, as an authority for dispensing with some of these scruples. This may, perhaps, appear an additional reason for attributing chiefly to him the naturalization of this Judaizing Christianity among the Anglo-Saxons. As usual, some of his admirers had gone further than he intended.

exhorted and allured abundantly to the foundation of churches, by the offer of patronage. But no trace appears of independent congregations or of congregations federally connected. Every new church was considered as an additional member of that single religious body which, without episcopacy, must want its full integrity. Whenever a diocese, accordingly, lost that spiritual head, which is alike necessary for securing the apostolical succession of ministers, and for assimilating religious communities with primitive antiquity, all the more considerable inhabitants were convened. Both laity and clergy solemnly admitted a serious loss, for the speedy reparation of which they were equally concerned. Hence it was by their united suffrages that a successor was appointed to the vacant see<sup>1</sup>. His original nomination might seem to have rested with the crown, and the popular duty to have been that of approval or rejection. Having been chosen, the bishop-elect was presented to the prelates of the province for examination. He was now interrogated as to the soundness of his belief, and required to give a solemn pledge for the due performance of his episcopal duties<sup>2</sup>. A profession of canonical obedience to his metropolitan was also exacted from him. Of obedience to the Roman see, or of a belief in transubstantiation, there appears no mention in our earliest pontificals<sup>3</sup>. Pro-

<sup>1</sup> For the address of clergy and laity to the bishops of the province, see Bampton Lectures, 177.

<sup>2</sup> For some of the interrogatories, see Bampton Lectures, 94.

<sup>3</sup> Nasmith in his printed Catalogue of Archbishop Parker's MSS. in the library of C. C. C., has the following remark on an ancient pontifical in that collection, No. 44:—"Promittit eps ordinandus se plebem ei commissum ex sacris Scripturis docturum, officium episcopale fideliter obsecuturum, ecclesiæ Dorobernensi se fore subjectum et obedientem, et articulis fidei assensum præbet. Nihil vero hic invenies de subjectione a sede Romanâ ab electis fessions of such obedience and belief are, therefore, palpable innovations. Their occurrence in later pontificals only, deservedly stamps them as interpolations. Formularies, thus interpolated, contrasted with more ancient records, afford invaluable evidence against allegations of antiquity advanced by a Romish advocate.

The prelacy constituted a standing branch of the Saxon witena-gemot, or parliament. Legislative assemblies merely lay were unknown to those who provided England with her envied constitution. It would be, indeed, monstrous folly, as well as gross injustice, to exclude from political deliberation that very class of considerable proprietors, in which alone information and morality are indispensable. On every meeting, accordingly, of the great national council, Anglo-Saxon archbishops, bishops, and abbots, were provided with appropriate places. Thus the civil polity of England was wisely established on a Christian basis. The clerical estate has formed an integral member of it from the first. An English prelate's right to occupy the legislative seat that has descended to him from the long line of his predecessors, is, therefore, founded on the most venerable of national prescriptions. It is no privilege derived from that Norman policy which converted episcopal endowments into baronies. It is far more ancient than the Conqueror's time; being rooted amidst the very foundations of the monarchy<sup>1</sup>.

---

postea exactâ, nec de transubstantiatione."—P. 28.

For the interpolations respecting traditions and papal constitutions, see Bampt. Lect. 95: for those respecting transubstantiation and remission of sins, see p. 420. It might have been remarked, in the Sermon upon Attrition, that the insertion of an interrogation as to the remission of sins, in the later pontificals, is an incidental proof that the scholastic doctrine of sacramental absolution is of no high antiquity.

<sup>1</sup> Our Saxon princes "had their Episcopal privileges were, indeed, abridged, according to modern ideas, under William. He found the bishop and the earl, or alderman, sitting concurrently as judges in the county-court; having for assessors the thanes or gentry within the shire. The tribunal entertained ordinary questions of litigation, and was open to appeals from the various hundred-courts. Its own decisions were liable to revision by the king alone. An Anglo-Saxon prelate was therefore continually before the public eye, invested with an important civil trust. After a reign of about seventeen years, the Conqueror abrogated this ancient usage, and following continental precedents, erected separate places of judicature for ecclesiastical suits<sup>1</sup>; which were to be conducted solely by canon-law. A principle of clerical exclusion, or more properly exemption, from one class of secular duties, was thus established: probably to please William's foreign ecclesiastics, who must have been indisposed, both from habit and prejudice, to the simple forms, and mixed jurisdiction of the old Anglo-Saxon courts<sup>2</sup>. This alteration, therefore, was rather meant to raise, than depress the Church. But it may supply an argument, general councils, first, in which they deliberated of all public matters: and these councils consisted of the archbishops, bishops, and abbots, of the clergy; and of the wise-men, great-men, aldermen, counts," (earls) "that is to say, of the chief of the laity, indifferently called in those times, by any or all of those names. In these councils they debated, both of civil and ecclesiastical affairs, and made laws with the prince's consent and concurrence, for the ordering of both. And this they did, so far as I can judge, after the like manner that we have seen the French were wont to do. The bishops and clergy advised apart in matters purely spiritual: but the great-men debated together with them in civil and mixed affairs, and in which the interest of the state was concerned, as well as that of the church."—ABP. WAKE'S Authority of Christian Princes. Lond. 1697, p. 161. See also his State of the Church, p. 135.

---

<sup>1</sup> HICKES, Dissert. Epistolaris. The. i. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Gent. Mag. Jan. 1844, p. 35.

if unexplained, to proud and selfish spirits, bent on reducing the ministers of religion to insignificance.

Soon after the conversion of Kent, an episcopal see was founded at Rochester, in subordination to that of Canterbury. To this, the archbishops are said to have nominated until after the Conquest<sup>1</sup>. When other kingdoms of the Heptarchy were converted, a single see was established in each. In Wessex this was the Oxfordshire Dorchester; in Essex, London; in East-Anglia, Dunwich; in Mercia, Lichfield; in Northumbria, Lindisfarne; and in Sussex, Selsey. Essex and Sussex remained permanently under one prelate. The diocese of Wessex was firstly dismembered by the foundation of a bishopric at Winchester<sup>2</sup>; subsequently still further, by such foundations at Sherborne<sup>3</sup>, Wilton<sup>4</sup>, Wells<sup>5</sup>, Crediton and Bodmin<sup>6</sup>. Mercia was gradually divided into the dioceses of Sidnacester, Leicester, Hereford<sup>7</sup>, Worcester<sup>8</sup>, and Lichfield. Of these, the two former <sup>1</sup> GODWIN, De Præsull. 527. This archiepiscopal privilege, we are told, was relinquished in favour of the monks of Rochester, by Archbishop Theobald, in 1147. But Godwin's editor shows the statement to be inaccurate. The ancient usage appears to have been, that the monks of Rochester should choose their own bishop in the chapter-house of Canterbury. Probably Theobald relieved them from this mark of subjection. It is obvious, that while the old practice continued, the archbishop would be likely to influence the election. The see of Rochester was founded in 604.

<sup>2</sup> The see of Dorchester was founded about 635; that of Winchester, about 663.—Ib. 202, 203.

<sup>3</sup> The see of Sherborne was founded about 705; it was removed to Salisbury some years after 1046.—LE NEVE, Fasti, 255, 256.

<sup>4</sup> Founded in 905. Herman was chosen to it in 1046, and, subsequently obtaining Sherborne, he procured the union of the two sees. Before his death he fixed the see at Salisbury.—Ib. 256.

<sup>5</sup> Founded in 905.—Ib. 31.

<sup>6</sup> Both founded in 905; they coalesced about 1040, on the establishment of St. Peter's at Exeter, as a see for both Devonshire and Cornwall. The Cornish see had been removed from Bodmin to St. Germain's.—Ib. 79.

<sup>7</sup> Founded in 680.—Ib. 107.

<sup>8</sup> Founded in 680.—GODWIN, De Præsull. 447.

coalesced, and were placed under a single bishop, seated at Dorchester in Oxfordshire<sup>1</sup>. Northumbria became two dioceses, of which a see for the southern was fixed at York<sup>2</sup>; for the northern, eventually, at Durham<sup>3</sup>. East-Anglia owned subjection to two prelates, during a considerable interval,—an additional see having been established at Elmham. In later Saxon times, this arrangement was overthrown; the bishop of Elmham having under him all East-Anglia. At the Conquest, accordingly, England's ecclesiastical superiors were two archbishops, and thirteen bishops: Wilton and Sherborne having merged in Salisbury, the two sees of Devonshire and Cornwall in that of Exeter.

For such variations in diocesan arrangements as might meet existing circumstances, provision had been made in the council of Hertford. It was there enacted, that as the faithful became more numerous, so should episcopal sees<sup>4</sup>. No prelate was, however, to assume a discretionary power of providing for spiritual wants not placed regularly under his charge. Every one was forbidden to interfere without his own diocese<sup>5</sup>. Precedence among bishops was regulated by the dates of

<sup>1</sup> Sidnacester was founded in 678; Leicester, in 737. This was soon transferred to Dorchester. That see was placed over also the diocese of Sidnacester, in the earlier part of the tenth century.—GODWIN, De Præsull. 281.

<sup>2</sup> Paulinus was nominally the first archbishop of York under the Anglo-Saxons; but he could not maintain his ground in Northumbria. After his flight, York remained without a prelate until the appointment of Chad in 664. From Chad, accordingly, the series of archbishops of York properly takes its beginning.

<sup>3</sup> The see of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, was founded in 635; this place having been burned the bishop removed, in 882, to Chester-le-Street. In 995, the episcopal see was transferred to Durham.—(LE NEVE, Fasti, 345, 346.) During a long period a see was established at Hexham, which had under its inspection a large portion of the modern diocese of Durham.

<sup>4</sup> Conc. Herudf. can. 9. SPELM. i. 153. WILK. i. 43. <sup>5</sup> Ib. can. 2.

their several consecrations<sup>1</sup>. Episcopal visitations were to be annually holden in suitable places throughout every diocese<sup>2</sup>. But this provision appears to have been made rather on account of the laity than of the clergy. The visiting bishop was to dispense among his people that sound religious instruction which must have been insufficiently supplied in a country but ill provided with rural churches. Especially was he to warn them against pagan rites, usages, and impostures. On the death of a bishop, the tenth part of all his moveable property was to be distributed in alms among the poor, and every Englishman, reduced to slavery in his days, was to be manumitted<sup>3</sup>. Of these charities, the reason assigned was, that he might obtain the fruit of retribution and indulgence of sins<sup>4</sup>. An additional provision for the welfare of his soul was imposed upon the laity, who were to be summoned to their several churches, and to sing there thirty psalms. Four times that number were expected from prelates and abbots generally. They were also to celebrate one hundred and twenty masses, and to manumit three slaves<sup>5</sup>.

Candidates for the sacred profession were required to spend a month, before ordination, with the bishop, who was allowed this time for examining and instructing them. As to their literary proficiency, expectations were, of course, extremely moderate. But pains were to be taken for ascertaining the soundness of their

<sup>1</sup> Conc. Herudf. can. 8. SPELM. i. 153.

<sup>2</sup> Conc. Clovesh. can. 3. SPELM. i. 246. WILK. i. 95. Conc. Calc. can. 3. SPELM. i. 293. WILK. i. 146.

<sup>3</sup> Johnson understands here every English slave belonging to himself. This limitation is most probable, but it does not appear in the text.

<sup>4</sup> "Ut per illud sui proprii laboris fructum retributionis mereatur, et indulgentiam peccatorum." —Syn. ap. Celych. can. 10. SPELM. i. 330. WILK. i. 171. <sup>5</sup> Ib.

belief, and their opinions on the divine attributes. They were also to display their acquaintance with the forms of public worship, and with such mystical significations as approved authorities had imposed upon its various features. Nor were inquiries to be forgotten upon their knowledge of the canons, and upon their competency to calculate the times for celebrating festivals and fasts<sup>1</sup>. The former kind of skill was requi-

<sup>1</sup> Se the hades wilnige cume anum monthe ær than had-timan, to tham b̄. and beo sythan on fandunge thær se bisceop tæce; and gewarnige thæt he hæbbe to tham fæce tha bigwiste on fodan and on foddre the he habban scule, thæt he mid tham thingum nan thing ne hefige, thæne he his fandian scule. Gif he thonne mid thæs lareowes tacne to b̄. cume, thonne beo he hade the nyr, gif he forth on ealum tham fyligean wille the b̄. him nisige. Thonne is ærest his thære fandunge fruma on hwilcan geleafan he sy, and hu he rihtne geleafan othrum mannum geswutelican cunne, and hwæt he swutelice understande thæs thethurh God gewearth, oth thon gyt geweorthan sceall: thonne hu he his thenunge cunne, and hu he fulluht understande, and hu he mæssan getacnunges undergyte, and eac othra cyric-thenunga; and hwæther he canon cunne be ænigum dæle: thonne hu he on gerim cræfte gear-ryne to-sceadan cunne. Gif he thissa thinga ealra gewis bith, thonne bith he hades the bet wyrthe. —(Be Gehadedum Mannum. Of Ordained Men, f. 34. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 121.) Let him who desires ordination come one month before the ordination-time to the b̄., and be then upon examination under the bishop's teaching; and let him take care that he have for the time the provision in food and fodder which he should have, that he be not troubled about any of these things, while he shall be examined. If he come to the b̄. with the instruction of a teacher, then he is the nearer ordination, provided he is henceforth willing to follow what the b̄. directs him. Then is first the beginning of his examination in what belief he may be, and what ability he has to explain a right belief to other men, and what he clearly understands of that which has been done by God, or yet shall be done: then how is his knowledge of divine service; and how he understands baptism; and how he comprehends the signification of the mass, and also of other church ministrations; and whether he knows the canons in any degree: then whether he knows enough of arithmetic to divide the year. If he be acquainted with all these things, then is he worthy of the ordination that he desires. An incidental presumption against the doctrine of transubstantiation appears fairly to arise from this extract. If a doctrine, so mysterious and incredible, had then been received by the English Church, it must site, both for comprehending the nature of clerical obligations, and for apportioning penances; the latter, for enabling clergymen to act as a sort of animated almanacs. At ordination, the porrection of sacred vessels was used, as it is now in the church of Rome. Simultaneously with this ceremony, when a priest was ordained, the bishop said, "Take authority to offer sacrifice and to celebrate mass, as well for the living as for the dead<sup>1</sup>." In the imposition of hands, the ancient church of England, like the modern, enjoined all priests present to unite with the bishop<sup>2</sup>.

After ordination, a priest was to consider himself as wedded to his church, and hence formally precluded from any prospect of changing it for another<sup>3</sup>. He was also to keep clear of interference within the disappear strange that candidates for ordination should not have undergone a particular examination upon it. Instead of this, however, they were merely to be examined as to their acquaintance with the significations of the mass, and other divine offices. It was the usage to seek mystical, figurative meanings in all Scripture and religious formularies. To this egregious trifling, the examination, most probably, was to be directed. In the thirteenth century, however, when transubstantiation, both name and thing, had obtained a pretty secure establishment, very particular directions were given from authority for inculcating a belief in it.

<sup>1</sup> "Accipe potestatem offerre sacrificium Do, missamque celebrare, tam pro vivis, quam et pro defunctis, in nomine Dni."—Fragment. libri Pontifical. pulcherrime

et magnâ ex parte ante Conqu. Angl. scripti. (HICKES, ii. 220.) Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Tiberius. C. 1. f. 158.

<sup>2</sup> "Presbiter cum ordinatur, ep̄o eum benedicente, et manum super caput ejus imponente, etiam om̄s presbiteri qui præsentes sunt manus suas juxta manum ep̄i super caput illius ponant."—Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Claudius. A. 3. f. 45.

<sup>3</sup> Cyricæ is mid rihte sacerdes æwe.—(Be Cyrican. Of the Church. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 121. f. 58.) The Church is with right a priest's wife. Riht is thæt ænig preost sylf-willes ne forlæte tha cyrican the he to gebletsod wæs, ac hæbbe tha him to riht æwe.—(Sinodal. Decret. 8. Ibid. f. 26.) Right is that no priest of his own accord leave the church to which he was ordained, but keep to it as a right wife.

tricts of brother clergymen<sup>1</sup>. Nor was he to venture upon officiating in a strange diocese, until he had produced commendatory letters from his own bishop<sup>2</sup>. Among duties expected of him appears to have been the education of youth<sup>3</sup>. In the exercise of his ordinary ministry, he was restrained from celebrating mass in private houses, unless in cases of sickness<sup>4</sup>. All the great luminaries of his profession most rigorously bound him to celibacy. Sacerdotal marriages were, indeed, commonly branded as execrable breaches of continence, and imaginary revelations threatened them with frightful retribution hereafter<sup>5</sup>. A rigour so adverse to the

<sup>1</sup> Riht is thæt nan preost othrum ne at do ænig thæra thinga the him to gebyrige, ne on his minstre, ne on his scrift-scire, ne on his gyld-scipe, ne on ænigum thære thinga the him to gebyrige.—(Sinodal. Decret. 9. in eod. cod. f. 26.) Right is that no priest do any of those things that belong to another, either in his minster, or in his shrift-shire (district assigned to him for receiving confessions, i. e., parish,) or in his guild-ship (sodality, of which he might be a member), or in any of the things that belong to him.

<sup>2</sup> Conc. Herudf. can. 5. SPELM. i. 153. WILK. i. 43.

<sup>3</sup> Capitul. incertæ editionis, 20. SPELM. i. 595. WILK. i. 270. The body of canons among which this is found was compiled by Theodulf, bishop of Orleans. Johnson (sub an. 994) thinks them to have been translated into Saxon by Elfric, for the guidance of English clergymen.

<sup>4</sup> Riht is thæt ænig preost on ænigum huse ne mæssige, butan on gehalgode cyrican, butan hit sy for

hwilces mannes ofer-seocnesse.—(Sinodal. Decret. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. 121. f. 29.) Right is that no priest mass in any house but in a hallowed church, unless it be for some man's over-sickness.

<sup>5</sup> Leofan men, in libro visionum, is awriten hu tha mæsse-preostas and tha diaconas the misleofodan her on worulde wer on witnunge wel hreonlice gesevene, swa swa se encgel geswutelode on thære gesihthe. Hi stodon gebundene, thæt hi abugan ne mihton, to heardum saglum æt heora hricge on tha hellican fyre oth heora gyrdlas, and tha earman wifmen the hi with forlagon, stodon ætforan heom, fæste getigede on tham hellican fyre up of thone nafdan ealle byrnende afre ætgædere, and deofol hi beswang swiþe gelome on heora gecyndlimum, swa swa se boc us secgth, and swa swa se encgel sæde on thære gesyhthe. Thær wæron gemengde mæsse-preostas and diaconas on thære cwylmince, forþam the hi Criste noldan clænlice thenian on his clænum theowdome.—(Bibl. Bodl.

general stream of human feeling, and confessedly sustained by no legal compulsion<sup>1</sup>, proved, however, inoperative upon a large proportion of the less distinguished ecclesiastics. Moses, they urged, and others among the most eminent of God's servants, were married men<sup>2</sup>. Vainly were apocryphal views of a future state produced for striking terror into themselves and their wives. In most particulars their credulity was naturally that of their age, but personal considerations sharpen human wits; and many a married Anglo-Saxon priest might see the ludicrous absurdity of tales invented for interfering with his own domestic comfort.

The Anglo-Saxon Church, like that of Rome, used a gradation of inferior ministers. Ælfric pronounces ecclesiastical orders to be the following seven:—ostiary, reader, exorcist, acolyte, sub-deacon, deacon, and priest. The ostiary was to keep the church-doors, and to ring the bell. The reader was to read in church, and to preach God's word. Perhaps the accustomed homily was often heard from his lips. The exorcist was to adjure malignant spirits. The acolyte was to hold the candle, or taper, when the Gospel was read, or the eucharist hallowed. The sub-deacon was to carry the

---

MSS. Junii. 121. f. 34. Be Gehadedum Mannum. Of Ordained Men.) Beloved men, in libro visionum, it is written how the mass-priests and the deacons who mislived here in the world, were in purgatory full cruelly beholden, even as the angel explained at the sight. They stood bounden, so that they could not stoop, to hard stakes at their backs in the hellish fire up to their girdles, and the wretched women who had been improperly connected with them stood before them, fast tied in the hellish fire ever burning upwards, and the devil lashed them very often on their middles, even as the book saith to us, and even as the angel said at the sight. There were mingled mass-priests and deacons in the torture, because they would not cleanly serve Christ in his clean service.

<sup>1</sup> Ælfric's Pastoral Epistle. Anc. LL. and Inst. of Engl. ii. 377.

<sup>2</sup> See Bampton Lectures, 118.

vessels to the deacon, and to wait upon him at the altar. The deacon was to wait upon the officiating priest, to place the offerings upon the altar, and to read the Gospel. He might baptize, and administer the eucharist. Priests, however, appear occasionally to have dispensed with his attendance at the altar, probably, from motives of economy. Such are stigmatised by Elfric as rather nominal members of the sacerdotal order, than really worthy of its privileges. Between the priesthood and the episcopate, Elfric allows no other difference than that of office; bishops being especially charged with certain duties, which might interfere with the regular engagements of ordinary priests. These duties are stated to be ordination, confirmation, the consecration of churches, and the care of God's rights<sup>1</sup>. Some authorities were not contented with resting episcopal superiority upon such narrow grounds. Another Anglo-Saxon enumeration of the seven ecclesiastical orders omits that of acolytes, and makes that of bishops the highest in the series<sup>2</sup>. Thus, evidently, there were those who looked upon the episcopate not only as a distinguished office, but also as a separate order. Both bishops and priests were under an awful expectation of leading their several flocks to the heavenly judgment-seat<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Ælf. ad Wulfsin. SPELM. i. 575. WILK. i. 251.

<sup>2</sup> DE OFFICIIS SEPTĒ GRADUUM. ("Ex. S. Gregorio Papā." WANLEY. HICKES, Theas. ii. 220.) —Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Tiborius. C. 1. f. 85.

<sup>3</sup> After citing, with some laxity, Ezekiel's denunciation against the mercenary and unfaithful pastors of Israel (ch. xxxiv. 2, et sequ.) a Saxon homily proceeds: Eall this is gecweden be biscopum, and be mæsse-preostum, the Godes folc on Domes-dæg, to tham dome lædan sculon; ælc thone dæl the him her on life betæht wæs.—(BE SACERDUM. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 22. f. 200.) All this is said of bishops and mass-priests, who, God's folk on Doom's-day, to the judgment shall lead; every one that portion which was committed to him here in life.

In Anglo-Saxon times, monks ordinarily were not members of the priesthood. Every monastery numbered among its inmates one or more of the sacerdotal order, to minister in sacred things: but the community was chiefly composed of ascetic laymen. The whole monastic body was divided into four several branches. The most respectable of these consisted of monks permanently domesticated in some conventual foundation, under the discipline of an abbot. Another was made up of anchorites, or hermits. These recluses were expected to have resided some time in a regular abbey, and not to have withdrawn from it until they had exhibited a strict conformity to the system there. After such probation it was deemed allowable to retire into a solitary cell, for the purpose of continuing, with augmented rigour, the austerities exacted by monastic obligations<sup>1</sup>. A third class of monks, passing under the oriental name of Sarabaites<sup>2</sup>, comprised such aspirants after unusual strictness as had adopted the tonsure, but would not embrace any received rule, or remain within a monas-

<sup>1</sup> "Anachoritarum vitam non improbo eorum, videlicet, qui in coenobiis regularibus instructi disciplinis ordinabiliter ad eremum secedunt, quibus est solitudo paradisi, et civitas carcer: ut activam vitam de labore manuum viventes exerceant, aut dulcedine contemplativæ vitæ mentem reficiant, fontem vitæ ore cordis sistant, et eorum quæ retro sunt obliiti ad ea ultrà non respiciant." —IVO CARNOTEN. Epist. 192. Paris. 1610, p. 342.

<sup>2</sup> Du Cange says that there are various opinions upon the etymology of this word. He makes it, however, to have come from Egypt. Other authors have referred the origin of Sarabaite to the Hebrew סרב refractory. The correctness of this etymology appears to admit of no reasonable question. In the Cottonian MS., from which an extract is given below, Saxon equivalents are placed over several of the words. Over this stands sylf-demera lareowas, self-judging teachers. Ivo of Chartres, in the epistle cited above (p. 840), asks of monks, which is better, to live regularly in monasteries, "an fieri Sarabaitas, ut in privatis locis proprio jure vivant, et vicium sibi de substantiâ pauperum per manum raptorum, et de fœnore negociatorum accipiant?"

tery. These devotees resided, as heretofore, in private houses, sometimes three or four together, probably under such regulations of their own as suited their particular ideas or convenience. Ascetic fervour under such laxity would be very liable to evaporate; and hence abodes adapted for it, but upon this independent principle, could hardly fail to shock admirers of overstrained religious rigour. The Sarabaites, accordingly, are described as a grievous reproach upon their profession. But monachism found its principal source of obloquy and mortification in the Gyrovagi, or wandering monks. These were noisy claimants of extraordinary holiness, but, in reality, idle vagabonds, who preferred hypocritical mendicency to labour<sup>1</sup>. Of such traders in religion generally, the true character is highly sensual. These ostentatious pretenders to a self-denying piety seem, accordingly, to have been notorious for gross indulgence<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> These monks appear from Ivo, in the epistle before cited, to have worn ordinarily the melote. ("Pellis ovina, ex Græco μηλωτή a μῆλον, ovis. Melotes pellis sordida, vel simplex, ex uno latere pendens, quâ monachi utuntur." —DU CANGE, in voc.) Elfric thus explains this term in his Glossary. Melotes, vel Pera: gæten, vel broccen rocc: a jacket (rochet), of goatskin, or broken. Both name and dress were, probably, adopted from Heb. xi. 37, where it is said of holy men, persecuted in ancient times, that they wandered about ἐν μηλωταῖς. Such apparel seems to have been commonly used by the prophets, and religious Jews in times of public difficulty. Of the sanctimonious vagabonds who went about in the middle ages, half-clad in these shaggy garments, Ivo proceeds to say (p. 342), "Verum cum quidam ex hâc professione in melotis suis vicos, castella, civitates girando perlustrent, humilitate vestium, vilitate ciborum, merita sua populis ostentant. Ambiunt fieri magistri qui nunquam fuerunt discipuli, deprimentes vitam omnium hominum, quia non sunt quod ipsi sunt. Hos nec eremitas computandos intelligo, nec coenobitas, sed girovagos, aut Sarabaitas."

<sup>2</sup> "Monachorum quatuor genera esse manifestum est. Primum, Coenobitarum, hoc est, monasteriale militans sub regulâ ve-abbate. Deinde, secundum genu-est Anachoritarum, id est, heremitarum, qui non conversionis fervore novitio, sed monasterii pro-

Had England adhered rigidly to the discipline provided by Theodore, the credit of monachism would not have been impaired by such impositions. Among the canons enacted at Hertford under that able metropolitan, one provides that monks shall remain stationary in the several monasteries to which they originally belonged, unless they could obtain the abbot's leave of absence, or removal<sup>1</sup>. No doubt a monastery strictly governed, was very much of a penitentiary prison. Even serious minds would be liable to become weary of such an abode, after the sharp edges of remorse had worn away, or the flame of fanaticism had abated. But the monk dignified his adoption of the cloister as later enthusiasts have their identification with certain religious parties. He termed it his conversion, and claimed a degree of sanctity which challenged admiration from the mass of men. Hence he could hardly complain of regulations indispensable for preserving the respectability of a body so numerous as his. Especially, was it reasonable to batione diuturnâ, didicerunt contra diabolum multorum solacio jam docti pugnare, et bene instructi fraternâ ex acie ad singularem pugnam heremi securi jam sine consolatione alterius, solâ manu vel brachio, contra vitia carnis vel cogitationum, Deo auxiliante, pugnare sufficiunt. Tertium vero monachorum teterrimum genus est Sarabaitarum, qui nullâ regulâ approbati experientiâ magistri, sicut aurum fornacis, sed in plumbi naturâ molliti, adhuc opibus servantes seculo, fidem mentiri Deo per tonsuram noscuntur. Qui bini, aut terni, aut certè singuli, sine pastore, non dominicis, sed suis inclusi ovilibus, pro lege est desideriorum voluptas: cum quicquid putaverint, vel elegerint, hoc dicunt scm, et quod noluerint, hoc putant non licere. Quartum vero genus est monachorum, quod nominatur Gyrovagum; qui tota vita sua per diversas provincias ternis aut quaternis diebus, per diversorum cellas hospitantur, semper vagi, et nunquam stabiles, et propriis voluptatibus, et gulæ illecebris servientes, et per omnia deteriores Sarabaitis. De quorum omnium miserimâ conversatione melius est silere quam loqui."—Regula S. Bened. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Tiberius. A. 3. f. 118.

<sup>1</sup> Conc. Herudf. can. 4. SPELM. i. 153. WILK. i. 43.

impose all this rigour upon monastics, because abuses of their character were crying public evils, and because they were largely indebted to the national liberality. Not only did many noble foundations provide for their sustenance and security, but also, in common with the clerical body, they enjoyed important immunities. Ecclesiastical property was, indeed, ordinarily liable to assessment for the repairs of bridges and highways; for the maintenance of fortifications; and for providing forces against hostile incursions<sup>1</sup>. This threefold liability was termed in Latin, Trinoda Necessitas, and it was a burden imposed upon landed possessions generally. There were, however, instances in which the Church was allowed the remarkable privilege of exemption from this triple charge<sup>2</sup>. Nor were any of her estates denied a more than ordinary degree of protection<sup>3</sup>.

The whole frame-work of Anglo-Saxon society was, indeed, religious. Voluntary associations, or Sodalities, answering to modern clubs, were common in the nation. The principal objects of these were mutual protection, assistance under unusual pecuniary calls<sup>4</sup>, and conviviality. One mass, however, for deceased associates, <sup>1</sup> The three members of the Trinoda Necessitas were called, in Saxon, Bricg-bote, Bridge-repair; Burh-bote, Town, or Castle-repair; and Fyrd, the Army. "Sometimes, instead of leaving the military contingent in uncertainty, the number of vassals and shields which the abbot was to send forth to the wars is specifically defined. In such a case, the land was held by military tenure." —PALGRAVE'S English Commonwealth, i. 157.

<sup>2</sup> Ib.

<sup>3</sup> Conc. Becanc. can. i. SPELM. i. 189. WILK. i. 57. Conc. Bergh.

can. i. SPELM. i. 194. WILK. i. 60. The second canon, enacted at Berghamstead, imposes a fine of fifty shillings for violating the protection of the Church. This was generally done by drawing offenders from sanctuary. But a law, guarding inviolability under a penalty so heavy, could hardly fail of throwing an unusual degree of security around all the Church's rights and possessions.

<sup>4</sup> As undertaking a journey, having a house burnt down, or being amerced in a fine.—HICKES, Thes. i. 21, 22.

another for those yet surviving, appears to have impressed a character of piety upon their meetings<sup>1</sup>. One of their objects was also to provide soul-shot on the death of every member; so that his disembodied spirit might enjoy the full benefit of such services as were proffered by the Church. Eventually, religious houses entered into these combinations<sup>2</sup>. In this case, the Guild-ship, as every such confederacy was vernacularly called, proposed an interchange of masses for the benefit of each other. But it is not likely that mutual protection for possessions and privileges was overlooked. Convivial or personal views were necessarily precluded.

In general terms, the king was bound, at his coronation, to respect ecclesiastical rights. He solemnly pledged himself to preserve the Church in real peace. But this pledge could not be redeemed, unless properties and privileges, legally bestowed upon her, were guarded from spoliation or encroachment. The Anglo-Saxon throne thus rested upon the basis of Christianity, and the king's duties were considered to be religious, no less than civil. Indeed, the former took precedence of the latter. Of the three royal engagements, that which provided for religion stood first<sup>3</sup>. England has, there-

<sup>1</sup> This appears among the articles of a Sodality formed at Exeter—HICKES, The. i. 22.

<sup>2</sup> Hickes has printed the articles of a Sodality formed of seven monasteries (The. i. 19), and he mentions a confederacy of this kind yet more numerous. (Ib. 20.) Both cases are, however, posterior to the Conquest. Mr. Turner has an interesting chapter upon the Guild-ship.—Hist. Angl.-Sax. iii. 98.

<sup>3</sup> "In the name of Christ I promise three things to the Christian people, my subjects. First, that the church of God and all the Christian people shall always preserve true peace through our arbitration. Second, that I will forbid rapacity, and all iniquities to every condition. Third, that I will command equity and mercy in all judgments, that to me, and to you, the gracious and merciful God may extend his mercy."—(SILVER'S Coronation Service of the Anglo-Saxon Kings. Oxf. 1831, p. 20.) The original of this fore, inherited a constitution from the most venerable antiquity, which recognises attention to the spiritual wants of men as the first and most important of a sovereign's duties. The coronation compact reminded an Anglo-Saxon monarch that his principal title to allegiance rested on his acting as the Christian head of a Christian people.

This character was impressed upon the nation by many statutes, and by severe penalties. The laws of Ina provided that parents should bring their children for baptism, within thirty days after birth, under forfeiture of as many shillings. If the infant died unbaptised, all the parents' property was forfeited<sup>1</sup>. Subsequently, the great festivals of Easter and Whitsuntide were the ordinary times for administering baptism<sup>2</sup>; oath is found in the British Museum among the Cottonian MSS. —(Claudius, A. 3. f. 7.) The service, which is in Latin, and has been printed by Dr. Silver, together with his translation of it, is entitled, in a hand of no great antiquity, Coronatio Athelredi Regis Anglo-Saxorum. Dr. Silver, accordingly, entitles it The Ceremony of the Consecration of King Ethelred II. A.D. 978. "The word consecrated king occurs first in the Saxon Chronicle in the reign of Offa, king of Mercia, the contemporary of Charlemagne, about a thousand years since, and it is very probable that the ceremony of Ethelred was then used."—SILVER, 148.

<sup>1</sup> LL. Inæ, can. 5. SPELM. i. 183. WILK. i. 58.

<sup>2</sup> These festivals had long been signalized by the administration of baptism in the Roman church, and Charlemain rendered this usage general through the west.

The fourth canon of the council of Mentz, holden under that famous emperor in 813, designates Easter and Whitsuntide as the legitimate times for baptizing, and limits to them the administration of that sacrament, unless in cases of necessity.—(LABB. et COSS. vii. 1242.) In England this regulation had been solemnly enacted at Calcuith, in 787.—(Conc. Calc. can. 2. SPELM. i. 293. WILK. i. 146.) Probably, however, it failed of meeting with universal acquiescence in this island; for the tenth, among the Laws of the Northumbrian Priests, enjoins baptism within nine days after birth, and imposes penalties for default.—(SPELM. i. 496. WILK. i. 218.) Towards the close of the twelfth century this appropriation of Easter and Whitsuntide fell silently into desuetude, neither pope nor council authorizing the change, or seemingly observing it.—DAL-but it was, on no account, to be delayed, under any appearance of danger to the child. It was administered by total immersion; and priests were expressly forbidden merely to pour water upon the head<sup>1</sup>. The child undertook, by his sponsors, to renounce the devil with his works and pomps. Of this engagement, these individuals were carefully to apprise him, as his faculties opened; and they were to teach him, besides, the Creed and the Lord's Prayer<sup>2</sup>. From the font it was also their duty to receive him, when baptism was completed<sup>3</sup>.

Anglo-Saxon ideas of female rights were just and liberal. Women were permitted to possess and dispose of property: nor was a person of any wealth enabled to marry, at all events, among his equals, until he had made a legal settlement upon his intended wife<sup>4</sup>. It was, however, the usage of ancient England, as of cognate nations<sup>5</sup>, to withhold the formal conveyance of this provision until the morning after marriage. Hence the dowry of an Anglo-Saxon lady was called her morning's gift<sup>6</sup>. Her friends had agreed upon a certain provision for her, in the event of a proposed marriage; and until the contract was completed on her part, the husband was not expected to complete it on his. But although the preliminaries of marriage

LAËUS, De Cultibus Religiosis Latinorum, Genev. 1671, p. 21.

<sup>1</sup> Syn. Celych. can. 11. SPELM. i. 331. WILK. i. 171.

<sup>2</sup> Conc. Calcuth. can. 2. SPELM. i. 293. WILK. i. 146.

<sup>3</sup> JOHNSON, sub an. 785. Hence sponsors were called susceptores. —DU CANGE, in voc. suscipere.

<sup>4</sup> For many interesting particulars respecting Anglo-Saxon marriages see TURNER'S Hist. of the Angl.-Sax. iii. 68.

<sup>5</sup> HICKES, Thes. Præf. xlii. "Every Saxon woman had her mundbora, or guardian, without whose consent she could not be married; and the remains of this custom may be traced in the marriage service, when the clergyman asks, Who giveth this woman to be married to this man?" —SILVER'S Coronation Service of the Anglo-Saxon Kings, 49.

<sup>6</sup> Morgen-gife, or gifu.

were necessarily civil, due care was taken for impressing it, upon the whole, with a very different character. The mass-priest was to pronounce a solemn blessing at nuptial ceremonies, unless one or both of the parties had been married before<sup>1</sup>. England has, therefore, ever treated marriage as “a holy estate,”—a contract essentially different from any other mutually made among Christians. Of this wise and Scriptural view the natural consequence was, that death alone was ordinarily considered a sufficient release from the nuptial tie<sup>2</sup>. Marriage was forbidden within four degrees of consanguinity: men were also prohibited from marrying their godmothers, or nuns, or divorced women, and from taking a second wife while the former one survived<sup>3</sup>. Second marriages, indeed, under any circumstances, were met by an ascetic principle of discouragement. A layman, who had lost his wife, was allowed to take another; nor was a widow denied a similar privilege. But such liberty was treated as a concession to the infirmity of the flesh, which could expect nothing beyond connivance. The Church did not venture to approve: the priest was, accordingly, to withhold his blessing. He was even prohibited from attending the nuptial feast; and the parties were to learn that they had committed an offence for which a formal penance must atone<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> LL. Edm. R. Angl. can. 8. SPELM. i. 426. WILK. i. 217.

<sup>2</sup> The council of Hertford allowed a man to dismiss his wife fornicationis causâ. But then it bound him, as he valued the name of Christian, to live single afterwards, unless he became reconciled to the offending woman.—

Conc. Herudf. can. 10. SPELM. i. 153. WILK. i. 43.

<sup>3</sup> Conc. Ænh. can. 6. WILK. i. 287.

<sup>4</sup> Ælf. ad Wulfsin. SPELM. i. 574. WILK. i. 251. Excerpt. Egb. Archiep. Ebor. 89. SPELM. i. 267. ap. WILK. can. 91. i. 101. The Church of England here,

As a belief in some sort of posthumous purgation reserved for human souls was general among the Anglo-Saxons, few persons of much opulence departed from life without having made a provision for their soul-shot. By this payment, clerical services were secured for the deceased's funeral, and prayers for the repose of his departed spirit. It was, most probably, with a view to render him the latter service, that mourning friends passed the night around his corpse. The wakes of ancient England led, however, to the same abuses as those of modern Ireland. The assembly was often rather one of gross revellers, than of pious mourners<sup>2</sup>. If the party had notoriously spent a religious life, his body might be interred within the church<sup>3</sup>. Thus an usage, which has long been merely as elsewhere, followed foreign churches. Mabillon says, in a note to his Museum Italicum (Lut. Par. 1687, tom. i. p. 389):—"Antiquissima est in ecclesiâ benedictio per nubentes, super secundo nubentes rarior." Both Egbert and Elfric, indeed, adopt the seventh canon of the council of Neo-Cæsarea, holden in 314.—(LABB. et COSS. i. 1487.) But that canon has been understood as levelled against a plurality of wives, which construction it will bear. Elfric has expressly applied it to a second marriage, contracted by a widower or widow.

<sup>1</sup> Dissertatio Epistolaris, 53. HICKES. Thes. tom. i. "Nothing can more strongly express the importance and necessity of this custom, than that several of their guilds seem to have been formed chiefly with a view to provide a fund for this purpose."—TURNER'S Hist. of the Angl.-Sar. iii. 146.

<sup>2</sup> Sume menn eac drincath æt dead manna lice ofer ealle tha niht swithe unrihtlice, and gremiath God mid heora gegaf spræce: thonne nan gebeorscipe ne gebyrath æt lice, ac halige gebedu thær gebyrath swithor.—(IIom. in St. Swithun. Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Julius. E. 7. f. 99.) Some men also drink over a dead man's corpse, all through the night very unrightly, and provoke God with their idle talk: when no drinking-party is proper over a corpse, but holy prayers rather are proper for it.

<sup>3</sup> Riht is thæt man innan cyrican ænine man ne byrige, butan man wite thæt he on life Gode to tham wel gecwemde, thæt man thurh thæt læte thæt he sy thæs lægeres myrthe.—(Sinodal Decret. 29. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 121. f. 27.) Right is that no man be buried within a church, unless it be known that in life he was well pleasing

one among the distinctions of opulence, originated in veneration for acknowledged piety. The relics of martyrs, indeed, honourably enshrined in places of primitive worship, appear to have supplied the precedent on which have arisen the sepulchral glories of later churches<sup>1</sup>.

The Anglo-Saxon churches were separated regularly from profane uses, by the imposing solemnity of episcopal consecration. This ancient<sup>2</sup> and becoming ceremony was performed with great magnificence, when the building to be dedicated was of superior importance<sup>3</sup>. Nor even in ordinary cases was its memory allowed to fall into oblivion, but annual solemnities taught a surrounding population to hail the happy day which had opened a house of God within an easy distance. Of this ancient religious holiday traces linger yet in our country villages. The petty feast or fair, now merely a yearly provocative to rustic revelry, commonly originated in the day when episcopal benediction hallowed that venerable pile which has trained so many generations for immortality. Anglo-Saxon churches, even of some note, were often built of wood<sup>4</sup>: hence timbering was the word in ordinary use to God, that through that he be deemed worthy of his resting-place.

---

<sup>1</sup> "Churches were commonly built over the sepulchres of the martyrs, or in the places where they suffered, or else the relics of the martyrs were translated into them."—BINGHAM'S Antiquities of the Christian Church, i. 327.

<sup>2</sup> It is known that churches were regularly consecrated in the fourth century, and it is probable that this usage is of much higher antiquity.—(Ib. 324.) All schisms and irregularities were provided against by making episcopal consent necessary even to the building of a church. This was done by the council of Chalcedon, and by the emperor Justinian.—Ib. 325.

<sup>3</sup> In the Life of Ethelwold, attributed to Wulfstan, are some curious Latin verses, describing the consecration of Winchester Cathedral in 980.—Acta SS. Ord. Benedict. v. 621.

<sup>4</sup> Finan placed his episcopal seat

for building<sup>1</sup>. When more durable materials were employed, the architects followed existing Roman models with as much fidelity as their own skill and that of their workmen would allow. This is proved sufficiently by specimens yet remaining. Their edifices naturally present some peculiarities, for which no hint is found in classical antiquity. But in general character, Anglo-Saxon and early Anglo-Norman buildings are little else than rude imitations of Roman architecture. A Norman clerestory window, centrally placed in the western side of the north transept of St. Frideswide's church at Oxford, even exhibits an Ionic volute. The opposite pilaster seems to have been intended for Corinthian.

Both vocal and instrumental music being used in public worship, the Anglo-Saxons were glad of organs for their larger churches. They were no strangers to that noblest of instruments early in the eighth century; and in the tenth, one of enormous size was erected at Winchester<sup>2</sup>. Seventy men, forming two companies which worked alternately, supplied it with wind. In the cathedral, probably, were many unglazed at Lindisfarne in such a church. —(BED. iii. 25, p. 233.) The venerable historian, however, speaks of this as done more Scotorum. Hence it seems reasonable to infer that the more considerable Anglo-Saxon churches were ordinarily of stone. An ancient church of timber yet exists at Greensted, near Ongar, in Essex.

---

<sup>1</sup> Even where an erection was not of timber, that word was in use. Thus the Saxon Chronicle (p. 202) says that Canute had built (timbered in the original) at Assingdon, "a minster of stone and lime for the souls of the men who were there slain."

<sup>2</sup> A description of the organ discovered by Mr. Turner, in ALDHELM De Laude Virginum, proves that instrument to have been known in England before the poet's death in 709. Dr. Lingard subsequently cited a passage from the Acta SS. Ord. Ben. in which Wulfstan's muse celebrates the prodigious organ provided for the cathedral of Winchester by Elphege.—Hist. of the Angl.-Sax. iii. 457, 458. Antiqu. de l'Egl. Angl.-Sax. 575.

apertures; otherwise, machinery so colossal must have emitted sound almost beyond endurance.

Among the uses to which Anglo-Saxon churches were applied, was one inherited from Pagan times. The heathen warrior under accusation solemnly protested his innocence, offering to prove it by some hazardous appeal to his paternal gods. He would thus enter upon a field highly favourable for the display of stern, impudent daring, abject superstition, and serpentine cunning—the most striking distinctions of savage life. Hence this picturesque experiment was emphatically called ordal, or ordeal, a northern word, signifying the judgment<sup>1</sup>; as if it were a mode of trying guilt or innocence, satisfactory above all others. On the Anglo-Saxon conversion, this absurd, collusive, presumptuous, and superstitious test of integrity, was continued under Christian forms. An accused party, desirous of thus vindicating his character, was to give personal notice of such intention to the priest, three days before the time appointed. On these three days he was to live only on bread, salt, water, and herbs. He was regularly to attend mass, and make his offering on each day. On the day of his trial he was to receive the eucharist, and to declare his innocence upon oath. Fire was then to be carried into the church if the cathedral of Bamberg. The word urdeles, as Hickes gives it, or urdelies, as it stands in print, occurs in ll. 13. 14, p. 43 of the published Harmony, or Heliand, as it is entitled. In the Saxon laws it is plain that ordeal means properly not the trial abstractedly, but the heated iron or other substance used.

<sup>1</sup> “Urdel, igitur, Saxonice, ordal, verbale est a veteri a Franco, vel Teutonico, Urdela, judicare.” —(Dissertatio Epistolaris, 149. HICKES, Thes. tom. i.) Dr. Hickes quotes for this opinion, the Cottonian Harmony of the Gospels, a venerable remain of antiquity then existing only in MS. but since published at Munich from a MS. formerly belonging to the

intended ordeal required it. This being done, the priest and the accused were to go into the sacred edifice together but no one was to be there besides. If hot iron were the test, a space was to be measured for carrying it exactly nine times the length of the accused party's foot. Notice was next given to the friends without, that the required heat had been reached, and two of them were to enter, one for the accuser, the other for the accused, to ascertain this. Their report being satisfactory, twelve were to enter on either side, and to range themselves opposite each other along the church: no further heating was allowed. Holy water was then to be sprinkled upon the whole party; they were to kiss the Gospels and the cross, and a service was to be read. At the last collect, the iron, if this were the test, was to be removed from the fire, and laid upon a supporter at the end of the nine measured feet. From this, the accused was to remove it, his hand being previously sprinkled with holy water. He was only required to carry it along three of the nine feet, on reaching the last of which he was to throw it down, and hasten to the altar: there his hand was to be bound and sealed up. On the third day afterwards this bandage was to be opened, but not before. If the trial consisted in removing a heavy substance out of boiling water, when the two witnesses entered the church the same formalities were enjoined. Other ordeals required an accused person to walk unhurt over red-hot ploughshares, or to sink immediately, when cast, bound by a rope, into water<sup>1</sup>.

---

<sup>1</sup> LL. Æthelst. can. 5. SPELM. | ordeals was published by Brown
i. 399. Ejusd. R. LL. quæ in | in the Fasciculus Rerum Expetend.
Saxonico desiderantur, can. 8. p. | et Fugiend. from the Textus Rof-
404. The service provided for | fensis.

Of these presumptuous absurdities, the red-hot iron ordeal appears to have been most in favour. It was, indeed, obviously the safest. The accused had scarcely to take the burning mass into his hand before he was allowed to throw it down. For this brief interval most men probably gave the skin some preparation. It was not, besides, expected that the hand would remain unburnt. Innocence was established if the priest, after three days, pronounced the injured part to be healthy. Thus a good constitution, or even a priest inclined to be merciful, could hardly fail of acquitting the bulk of men tried in this way. In some instances, there can be no reasonable doubt, a bribe secured mercy from the priest. Most cases he would be likely to consider as calling for no very rigorous scrutiny. The Roman church very properly refused encouragement to such modes of tempting providence, and to her hierarchy Europe was eventually indebted for their discontinuance<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> "It does not appear that the Church of Rome ever gave countenance to it; and it is a very singular instance of a gross corruption that it had not the pope or his creatures for its author. If it ever was directly authorized by any council in a foreign church, it was only by some new converts in Germany in the ninth century. The council of Mentz, 847, c. 24, enjoins the ordeal of ploughshares to suspected servants. But to give the pope, I mean Stephen V., his due, he presently condemned it in an epistle to the bishop of Mentz, in whose diocese it chiefly prevailed. Nay, Alexander II., the Conqueror's own ghostly father, absolutely forbade it. The first prohibition of ordeal mentioned by Sir H. S." (Spelman) "here in England, is in a letter from King Henry III. to his justices itinerant in the north, in the third year of his reign. Yet this learned knight observes, that eight years after this he granted the religious of Sempringham power to administer it. Great lawyers have said that it was suppressed by Act of Parliament in the third year of his reign. But the record mentions only the king's letter, and the king's letter says it was done by the advice of his council, and gives this only reason, that it was forbidden by the Church of Rome." —(JOHNSON, sub an. 1065. can. 2.) Ordeals, however, cannot be accu-

Ordeals, being esteemed a branch of civil jurisprudence, were forbidden on days consecrated to religion. The same prohibition lay against judicial oaths<sup>1</sup>. Connected with such suspensions of ordinary business, was a regulation of the last importance in an age of violence and insecurity. The days that forbade an ordeal and a solemn oath, interdicted also angry passions from warlike outrage. The Church mercifully proclaimed a general truce, and her holy voice was wisely seconded by the civil power. Thus, ferocious overbearing violence was continually arrested in its pitiless career, and religion provided stated respites for the weak, which laws merely human could not safely promise. Happily the days were numerous on which the Church insisted upon peace. In every year whole seasons were thus kindly consecrated. The truce of religion extended from the beginning of Advent until the eighth day after the Epiphany; from Septuagesima until the octaves of Easter; from Ascension Day until the same time after Whit-Sunday; and through all the Ember weeks. Besides this the holy truce began on three o'clock on every Saturday afternoon, and lasted until Monday morning. The same happy privilege secured a joyful welcome for all the principal saints' days, and within particular districts, for the festivals of those saints to whom their churches were severally dedicated. The eve came, and ferocity was hushed. Protection, also, was at all times extended rately taken as extinguished under Henry III. For the trial by wager of battle is a mere ordeal, and the legal extinction of this is very recent. It was introduced under the Conqueror. A trace of the water ordeal lingered among the common people until the last century, in their disposition to try barbarous experiments upon unhappy creatures accused of witchcraft.

<sup>1</sup> LL. Edov. Sen. et Guth. RR. c. 9. SPELM. i. 393. WILK. i. 203.

to persons in their way to or from a church, or a synod, or a chapter'. Disregard of these provisions was properly cognizable before the bishop. If his authority were neglected or defied, it was to be rendered available in the civil courts<sup>3</sup>.

It was among the evils of religious usages introduced from Rome, that they tended to confirm the superstition of barbarian converts. A rude and ignorant populace could not fail of considering as powerful charms those substances which the Church invested with a venerable character. Nor were the clerical members of such a community often likely to disturb the prejudices of their contemporaries. It appears, accordingly, that water, oil, and other like ingredients, in Romish worship, were esteemed efficacious for eradicating bodily disease<sup>3</sup>. There is, indeed, always this danger when material objects are connected with ordinary devotion. To the reflecting few these may be only interesting relics of a

<sup>1</sup> LL. Eccl. S. Edw. R. et Conf. c. 3. SPELM. i. 619. WILK. i. 311.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. c. 7.

<sup>3</sup> Mid halegum wætere he gehælde sum wif, thæs ealdormannes æwe, fram earmlicere cothe, and heo sona gesund him sylfum thenode. Eft on thære ylcan tide he mid ele smyrode an licgende mæden on langsumum sare, thurh hefig-tinum heafod-ece, and hire sona wæs bet. Sum eanfæst wer wæs eac yfele gehæfd, and læg æt forth-sithe his freondum orwene. Tha hæfde heora sum haligne hlafl thone the se eadiga wer ær gebletsode, and he thæne thær-rihte on wæter bedypte, and his adligum mæge on thone muthe begeat, and thær-rihte thære adle gestilde.—

(Hom. in Nat. S. Cuthb. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. BODLEY, 340, f. 65.) With holy water he healed a woman, the alderman's wife, from a miserable disease, and she, soon sound, waited upon himself. Afterwards at the same time, he with oil smeared a maiden lying in long affliction, through a grievous headache, and she was soon better of it. A certain pious man was also very ill, and lay at the point of death given over by his friends. One of these had some holy bread which the pious man formerly blessed, and he dipped it immediately in water, and moistened his kinsman's mouth with it, and immediately assuaged the disease.

distant age: among the thoughtless many they will certainly find aliment for a grovelling superstition.

No feature was, however, more exceptionable in Anglo-Saxon theology than the penitential system. It might seem a very desirable check upon human corruption, especially among a gross and barbarous people, that every offence should rigorously exact a proportionable penalty. Nor, undoubtedly, could the solemn recognition of such a principle fail to render important public services. Yet these were far less than might have resulted from the system nakedly considered. Fasts of months, or years, or even of a whole life, were denounced against iniquities according to their several magnitudes. But then all this rigour was open to commutation. The same authority that had provided a scale of personal austerity had also provided an equivalent scale far more agreeable. If a penitent were disquieted by the prospect of a day's fast, a penny would release him from the obligation<sup>1</sup>. If he had incurred a more than common liability of this kind he might build a church, and ecclesiastical authorities would pronounce him free<sup>2</sup>. Thus wealthy sinners found no great reason to tax the penitentials with intolerable severity. Nor was poverty left under the necessity of drawing an opposite conclusion. The repetition of psalms was pronounced highly meritorious<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Man may one day's fast with one penny redeem.—(WANLEY, apud HICKES, The. ii. 146.) Undoubtedly the Saxon penny answered to three of modern times, and the existing value of money rendered it a sum worth considering.

<sup>2</sup> Amends for deeds are provided in various ways. A great man may redeem with alms. Let him who has the power rear a church in God's honour, and, if he have an opportunity, let him give land thereto.—Ib. 198.

<sup>3</sup> "Delet peccata."—(Bibl. Lameth. MSS. 427. f. 1.) The second leaf of this MS. contains the following prayer: "Suscipere dignare Dñe ds omps hos

Hence he who shrank from a fast, yet wanted means to commute it for money, might still appease an accusing conscience by a proportionate number of psalms'. Among the reading and thinking few, doubts appear to have been occasionally felt as to the soundness of this system; for it is recommended that repentance should not cease, although discipline may require nothing further, it being uncertain what value God may put upon such services<sup>2</sup>. But an observation of this kind was likely to pass unheeded amidst a vast mass of matter far more popular. Hence Anglo-Saxon penitential doctrines were calculated, upon the whole, to psalmos consecratos quos ego indignus et peccatore decantare cupio in honorem nominis tui dñi nr̄i Ihu Xpi, et beatæ Mariæ semper virginis, et omnium sc̄orum, pro me misero infelici, et pro cunctis facinoribus meis, sive factis, sive dictis, sive cogitationibus concupiscentis iniquitatibus, sive omnibus negligentis meis magnis ac minimis; ut isti psalmi proficiant mihi ad vitam æternam, et remissionem omnium peccatorum et spatium adjuvando, et vivam penitentiam faciendo: per." Wanley refers this MS. vol. generally to the time of Edgar, or even to an earlier date; but he pronounces the prayer above, and many other things in the book, to have been written at a period far more recent.—HICKES, Thes. ii. 268.

<sup>1</sup> He who owes one week on bread and water, let him sing 300 psalms, kneeling, or 320 without kneeling, as it is said above. And he who must do penance a month's space on bread and water, let him sing a thousand psalms and 200 kneeling, and without kneeling 1680.—Pœnitentiale D. Ecgbert. Arch. Ebor. i. 2. WILK. i. 115.

<sup>2</sup> If a layman slay another without guilt, let him fast VII. years on bread and water, and then III. as his confessor teaches him: and after the VII. years' amends, let him ever earnestly repent of his misdeeds, as far as he may, because it is unknown how acceptable his amends may be with God.—(WANLEY apud HICKES, Thes. ii. 146.) Dr. Lingard, by saying that Theodore published a code of laws for the imposition of sacramental penance, (Antiqu. of the Angl.-Sax. Ch. Fr. Transl. p. 246,) might lead his readers to suppose that the Anglo-Saxons had anticipated the schoolmen upon such subjects. The passage, however, here translated from Wanley's Saxon extract, sufficiently shows that there was no such anticipation. For further information upon Anglo-Saxon penitential doctrines, see Bampt. Lect. Serm V. with the Proofs and Illustrations.

serve sound religion and morality very uncertainly and equivocally.

A party striving for ascendancy is naturally prone to magnify those who raise its credit. If religious, it proclaims the superior morality of its more serviceable members. Anglo-Saxon efforts for extirpating paganism and establishing monachism were thus facilitated. To many devotees, conspicuous for zeal or self-denial, was attributed a saintly character, and eventually their tombs were eagerly frequented as the seats of miraculous agency. Nor did their posthumous importance fade until the Reformation. Even then long prescription, and services really rendered in some cases to religion, pleaded successfully against a total exclusion of such names from the national calendar. Others of them have escaped oblivion from local associations.

Upon several among these ancient saints sufficient notice has already been bestowed incidentally. Chad, whom Theodore displaced from York and subsequently seated at Lichfield, may be further mentioned because the homily for his day proves wheel-carriages to have been then in use. Theodore found him in the habit of undertaking pedestrian journeys far above his strength to preach the Gospel. He not only mounted him on horseback, but insisted also on his using a horse-wain occasionally<sup>1</sup>.

Another exemplary personage whom Theodore drew from monastic privacy to episcopal cares, was Cuthbert, the saint of Durham. Few authentic particulars respecting him are, however, extant, beyond his great reluctance to become a bishop, and his rigid perseverance, after yielding to such compulsion, in the monkish dress and diet<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Hine se ercebiscop mid his agenne hond on horse ahof, forthon he hine swithe haligne wer gemette: and he hine nedde that he swa hider on horse-wegen were, swa hit neod-thearfe were.—(Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 24. Hom. 1.) Him the archbishop with his own hand mounted on a horse, because | he found him a very holy man: he compelled him also to travel about in a horse-wain, if the case required. St. Chad's conveyance was, probably, a rude specimen of that kind, known latterly as the taxed cart. Chad had a brother of the same name, who was bishop of London.

Etheldred, or Audrey, Ely's great attraction, was chiefly famed for an invincible refusal to gratify either of her husbands, and an ascetic piety hardly reconcilable with strict cleanliness<sup>2</sup>. Her death seems to have and bishop Trumwine, with other pious men, and they much besought the saint, bent their knees, and begged with tears, until they drew him weeping from the solitude to the synod together with them. In the same folio we learn, that, after Cuthbert became bishop, Nolde awendan his gewunelic an big-leofan, ne his gewæda the he on westene hæfde. He would not change his accustomed food, nor his needs that he had in the solitude.

<sup>1</sup> Æfter thyssum wordum wearth gemot gehæfd, and Ecgfridus thæron gesæt, and Theodorus thysses iglandes arcebisceop, mid manegum othrum gethungenum witum, and hi ealle amodlice thone eadigan Cuthberhtus to bisceope gecuron. Tha sændon heo sona gewritu, mid tham ærende to tham eadigan were; ac hi ne mighton hine of his mynstre gebringan. Tha reow se cyning sylf Ecgfridus to tham iglande, and Trumwine bisceop, mid othrum eamfæstum werum, and hi thone halgan smithe halsudon, heora cneowu bigdon, and mid tearum bædon, oththæt hine wepende of tham westene atugon to tham sinothe samod mid him.—(Bibl. Bodl. MSS. BODLEY, 340. Hom. in Nat. S. Cuthb. f. 64.) After this an assembly was holden, and Ecgfridus sate therein, and Theodorus, archbishop of this island, with many other noble councillors, and they all unanimously chose the blessed Cuthberhtus as bishop. Then they quickly sent a writ with a message to the blessed man; but they could not bring him from his minster. Then rowed the king himself Ecgfridus to the island, (Lindisfarne,)

“Notwithstanding the great character of Cuthbert's piety, 'tis plain he sided with King Egfrid and Theodore against Wilfrid: and, by consequence, took no notice of the sentence in Wilfrid's favour, decreed by the Roman synod. Had not the case stood thus, he would never have made use of King Egfrid's recommendation, nor have accepted the see of Holy Island, which was part of Wilfrid's jurisdiction, and taken out of the diocese of York, against his consent.”—COLLIER, Eccl. Hist. i. 110.

<sup>2</sup> “After her entrance therein (the monastery of Ely,) she ever wore woollen, and never linen about her; which whether it made happened rather suddenly, from an operation undertaken by some empiric, as he thought, successfully; but his patient died on the third day afterwards<sup>1</sup>. Her virginity was regarded as indisputable, because her body was found undecomposed, sixteen years after death. Such a deviation from the ordinary course of nature was, indeed, regularly considered as a proof of unbroken continence<sup>2</sup>.

The memory of Frideswide yet lingers at Christchurch, pre-eminent even in Oxford, among seats and seminaries of learning and religion. She was daughter of Didan, a princely chieftain who ruled in that venerable city with some sort of delegated authority<sup>3</sup>. Her claim to saintly honours appears to have rested on a her more holy, or less cleanly, let others decide."—(FULLER, Church Hist. 91.) The homily adds to the account of her dress, that she wolde seld-hwæne hire lic bathian butan to heah tidum, and thonne heo wolde ærest calle tha bathian the on tham minstre wæron, and wolde him thenian mid hire thine-num, and thonne hi sylfe bathian, (Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Julius. E. 7. f. 93.) would rarely bathe her body unless on high days, and then she would first have all them bathe who were in the minster, and would wait upon them with her maids, and then bathe herself.

<sup>1</sup> Tha wæs sum læce on tham geleaffullum heape, Cynefryth gehaten, and hi cwædon tha sume thæt se læce sceolde ascetan thæt geswell; tha dyde he sona swa, and thær saht wyrnis. Wearth him tha gethuht swilce heo gewurpan mihte, ac heo gewat of worulde mid wuldre to Gode, on tham thriddan dæge syththan se dolh wæs geopenod.—(Ib.) There was a certain physician in the believing company, named Cynefryth, and some people told her that this physician would reduce the swelling; which he soon did, and relieved her from the pain. He thought that she might recover, but she passed out of the world with glory to God, on the third day after the ulcer was opened. The ulcerated tumour which had so fatal a result, was under the chin, and Etheldred appears to have considered it as a sort of judgment for the pleasure she had formerly taken in wearing necklaces.

<sup>2</sup> Hit is swutol thæt heo wæs ungewenmed mæden, thonne hire lichama no mihte formolsnian on eorþan.—(Ib. f. 94.) It is manifest that she was an undefiled maiden, when her body could not decompose in the ground.

<sup>3</sup> In one of the Bodleian MSS. (Laud. 114.) containing lives of saints, and St. Austin De Doctrinâ Christianâ, Frideswide's father is called a subregulus. f. 132.

determination to live as a nun rather than as a distinguished married lady<sup>1</sup>.

Edmund, king of East-Anglia<sup>2</sup>, to whose admitted sanctity the Suffolk Bury owed eventually a splendid abbey, was unmercifully scourged against a tree by some Danish pirates; and, like another Sebastian, then transfixing with spears. The pagan bigotry of these fierce invaders formed a hateful contrast with the Christian resignation of their victim. Hence pious minds embalmed the memory of Edmund, and monastic revenue was certain to wait on his remains. His head being stricken off, was cast into a tangled thicket. There, ancient legends tell, it found protection from a hungry beast of prey. Perhaps a modern might suppose the animal to have been restrained by fear; for the same authorities that commemorate its abstinence, record another circumstance fully as remarkable. Different individuals of a party, scattered in a wood, were in the habit of calling out occasionally, "Where art thou, comrade?" To those in quest of Edmund's head the usual answer, "Here, here, here," was regularly returned from a single spot. To this all the stragglers naturally repaired, and were amazed on finding every reply to have come from no other than the object of their search, respectfully guarded within the talons of a wolf<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> "Migravit igitur Fritheswit-cha virgo ad dñm quarto decimo Kalendas Novembris; anno ab incarnatione dñi septingentesimo vicessimo septimo."—Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Nero. E. 1. f. 363.

<sup>2</sup> Crowned in 856, being fifteen years of age, at Bures, St. Mary's, in Suffolk, on the Stour, then a royal residence, and slain in 870.—(ASSER, 14, 20. BATTELY, Antiquitt. S. Edm. Burg. p. 15.) He met his death at Hoxne, in Suffolk. The Danes were commanded by Hinguar, as the homily spells his name, but it is more usually spelt without the aspirate.

<sup>3</sup> This is gravely introduced into the service for St. Edmund's day.

Among the northern saints was Oswald, king of Northumbria. He had, indeed, fairly earned respectful remembrance in that part of England. It was largely indebted to him for conversion. But he rendered this important service by means of a native church. His invitation brought Aidan from Scotland; and that missionary's dialect being ill understood in Northumbria, Oswald acted as interpreter. His charitable disposition was displayed in the surrender of an Easter dinner, and “Dani vero relinquentes corpus, caput in silvâ recedentes asportaverunt, atque inter densa veprum fruticeta occultârunt. Quibus abeuntibus, Christiani corpus inveni- entes, caput quesierunt; atque Ubi es? aliis ad alios in silvâ clamantibus, caput respondit Her, Her, Her, quod est, Hic, Hic, Hic.”—(Breviar. Sarisb. 20 Novem.) The wolf's connexion with this extraordinary head is detailed in another lesson. It will, probably, be generally thought, that a prayer-book prescribing such lessons was not reformed before its time. The homily is amusingly picturesque. Hi eodon tha secende ealle endemes, and symle clypi- gende, swa swa hit gewunelic is tham the on wuda gath oft, Hwær eart thu, gefera? And him and- wyrde thæt heafod, Her, Her, Her. And swa gelome clypode, andswarigende him eallum, swa oft swa heora ænig clypode, oth thæt hi ealle becomen thurh tha clypunga him to. Tha læg se græge wulf the bewiste thæt heafod, and mid tham twam fotum hæfde thæt heafod beclypped, grædig and hungrig, and for Gode ne dorste thæs hæfdes abyrian, and heold hit with deor. Tha wurdon hi ofwundrode thæs wulfes hydrædenne, and thæt halige heafod ham feredon mid him, than- cigende tham Ælmihtigan ealra his wundra. Ac se wulf folgode forth mid tham hæfde, oth thæt hi to tune comon, swilce he tam wære, and gewende eft siththan to wuda ongean.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Julius. E. 7. f. 203. Bibl. Bodl. MSS. BODLEY, 343.) They went then seeking all together, and constantly calling, as is the wont of those who oft go into woods, Where art thou, comrade? And to them answered the head, Here, Here, Here. Thus all were answered as often as any of them called, until they all came through the calling to it. There lay the gray wolf that guarded the head, and with his two feet had the head embraced, greedy and hungry, and for God durst not taste the head, and held it against wild beasts. Then were they astonished at the wolf's guardianship, and carried the holy head home with them, thanking the Almighty for all his wonders. But the wolf followed forth with the head, until they came to town, as if he were tame, and after that turned into the woods again.

of the silver dish containing it, to a crowd of hungry poor waiting for his alms. To this incident Oswald, identified completely as he was with the national party, seems to have been largely indebted for posthumous reverence. As he pointed to the dish, and so liberally directed its appropriation, Aidan said, May that blessed hand defy corruption. Soon afterwards, Oswald fell in battle, and his right hand being found possessed of properties decidedly antiseptic<sup>1</sup>, became invaluable for strengthening a monastic treasury.

The fens of Lincolnshire gloried in an anchorite named Guthlac<sup>2</sup>. Originally, he was little better than a bold marauder; but higher principles gained upon him in early manhood, and overwhelmed him with remorse<sup>3</sup>. He sought Croyland<sup>4</sup> for his hermitage, as being a spot unusually repulsive. His choice even-<sup>1</sup> Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Julius. E. 7. ff. 152, 153. "Grant this miracle of Oswald's hand literally true in the latitude thereof; I desire any ingenuous papist to consider the time wherein it was acted. It was Easter-day, yea, such an Easter-day as was celebrated by the Quartodecimans, Aidan being present thereat, contrary to the time which the canons of Rome appointed. Now, did not a divine finger in Oswald his miraculous hand point out this day then to be truly observed? Let the papists produce such another miracle, to grace and credit their Easter, Roman style, and then they say something to the purpose."—FULLER, Ch. Hist. 82.

<sup>2</sup> This is, probably, the Goodlake of modern English surnames. Guthlac's parents were of some distinction, and lived in the time of Ethelred, king of Mercia.—(Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Vespasian. D. 21. f. 18.) Ethelred abdicated and retired into a monastery in 704.—Saxon Chr. 60.

<sup>3</sup> We learn from the MS. cited in the last note, that he was four-and-twenty winters old when he forsook the habits of his earlier years. He then retired into the monastery of Repton, and remained there two years. Thus his age was twenty six when he turned hermit, and he is considered the first of his nation who adopted that character. There is a life of Guthlac, in Latin, very ancient, corresponding with the Saxon, (which is probably translated from it,) among the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum.—Nero. E. I. f. 183.

<sup>4</sup> Or Crowland.

tually caused a spacious monastery to rear its majestic head over the watery waste. Improvements immediately began, which have gradually converted barren marshes into fruitful fields. Many similar services have been rendered by the Church. A long succession of owners, always resident, often intelligent, have taught repeatedly the dreary wilderness to supply no unimportant measure of a nation's wealth.

The Anglo-Saxons, it has commonly been supposed, were provided with a complete vernacular translation of Holy Scripture. No such volume has, however, been discovered. Hence the existence of such, at any time, is very questionable. The Bible, in fact, was evidently considered as a Latin book in ante-Norman England. Texts were generally cited in that language, and then rendered into the native idiom, according to the Roman usage of later times. Doubts even entered reflecting minds as to the expediency of opening Scripture unreservedly to vulgar eyes. But such hesitation, if sufficiently examined, will be found little serviceable to the cause of modern Rome. It arose not from the Church's alleged possession of an unwritten word, and from a consequent apprehension lest an analogy should be drawn between this and the similar Jewish claim so pointedly reprobated by our Saviour. Ante-Norman indecision upon an indiscriminate publication of the sacred record flowed from a perception of contemporary grossness. An abuse was feared of certain Scriptural relations to justify individual obliquities'.

---

<sup>1</sup> Now it thinketh me, love, that that work (the translation of Genesis) is very dangerous for me or any men to undertake: because I dread lest some foolish man read | this book, or hear it read, who should ween that he may live now under the new law, even as the old fathers lived then in that time, ere that the old law was estu-

All their other feelings made learned Anglo-Saxons anxious to spread a knowledge of the Bible.

To such anxiety several interesting versions bear honourable testimony. The eighth century is thought to have produced the four Gospels in a vernacular dress<sup>1</sup>. A like antiquity may possibly be claimed for the Psalter<sup>2</sup>. Of the translator, in either case, nothing is certainly known. The Pentateuch, with most of Joshua and Judges, and some parts of Samuel, Kings, blished; or even as men lived under Moyses' law. — (Ælfric, monk, to Æthelwold, alderman. Prefatio Genesis, Anglice. Ed. Thwaites, p. 1.) Ælfric then proceeds to relate how an illiterate instructor of his own dwelt upon Jacob's matrimonial connexions with two sisters and their two maids. This passage has been partly used already in the note respecting Ælfric's early education. His own account of the biblical versions made by him is to be found in a Saxon piece which he addressed to Sigwerd, of East-Heolon, and which was published by L'Isle in 1623.

<sup>1</sup> BE. MARSH'S Michaelis, ii. 637. The four Gospels in Anglo-Saxon were printed in London, by Abp. Parker's means, in 1571: Foxe, the martyrologist, being editor. In 1665, the Gospels were reprinted at Dordrecht, under the care of Dr. Marshall, rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, with the parallel Mæso-Gothic version. Some title-pages of this edition exhibit Amsterdam, as the place of impression, and 1684, as the date. In 1842, a new edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels was printed in London by Mr. Thorpe.

Foxe's edition is from a late MS. written evidently after Anglo-Saxon had lost its original purity. Marshall's text is of an earlier date, but omissions in the MS. are unskilfully supplied by the editor. Mr. Thorpe's text is formed from two Cambridge MSS. with occasional references to a MS. in the Bodleian, and another in the British Museum. From his preface these particulars are taken. "From the different styles of the Anglo-Saxon versions of the Gospels, they must have been translated oftener than once." — TURNER'S Hist. Angl.-Sax. iii. 499.

<sup>2</sup> "De Authore autem hujus versionis haud quicquam statuimus. Primus Psalmorum in Linguam Saxoniam translator sub anno 709, laudatur Adelmus Episc. Shirburnensis; sed cum regem Alfredum Magnum, translationem etiam hujusmodi, paulo ante annum 909, adortum esse legimus, priorem illam ex Danica tempestate periisse verisimile est, et posteriorem sanè ex importuna Regis morte abortivam fuisse novimus." — Præf. in Psalt. Latino-Saxonic. Vet. a JOH. SPELMANNO, edit. Lond. 1640.

Chronicles, Esther, and Maccabees, was translated by Elfric. He presented his countrymen, also, with a brief homiletic sketch of Job. A poetic piece, now imperfect, founded upon the apocryphal book of Judith, and written, it has been thought, in Dano-Saxon, is, probably, another extant evidence of his industry. In this last undertaking he had an eye to the Danish incursions; thinking that a harassed nation could dwell upon few pictures more advantageously than one of successful resistance to foreign aggression. The Anglo-Saxons likewise possessed in their native idiom the pseudo-gospel, passing under the name of Nicodemus<sup>1</sup>. Probably this was considered a valuable supplement to the inspired records of our blessed Saviour's life. If any other Scriptural versions ever existed, authentic particulars of them are unknown. We have, indeed, besides, a paraphrastic view of the leading incidents detailed by Moses. Its author seems to have been that Cædmon, whose extraordinary talents Bede commemorates, and ascribes to inspiration. But his work is a sacred poem, not a biblical version<sup>2</sup>. There is,

<sup>1</sup> All these, except the selections from Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Esther, and Maccabees, which are most probably lost, were published by Thwaites, at Oxford, in 1698, under the following title: Heptateuchus, Liber Job, et Evangelium Nicodemi: Anglo-Saxonice. Historiæ Judith Fragmentum: Dano-Saxonice. In that collection, the Judith appears as prose. Mr. Thorpe has reprinted it with improvements, in his Analecta Anglo-Saxonica, (Lond. 1834,) arranged as verse. He says, (Pref. viii.) "The entire poem, of which it probably formed an inconsiderable portion, must have been a noble production."

<sup>2</sup> Bede (iv. 24. p. 327) relates, that Cædmon abruptly retired from a table, where the guests were singing in succession, when the harp came to him, because he had no verse at command. In the course of the following night he dreamed that a stranger desired him to sing. He pleaded inability, but was told that he did not know his own powers. Being further pressed, he began to sing the Creation; and he subsequently retained the faculty of clothing in verse any sacred subject read or likewise, in the British Museum, an ancient Harmony of the Gospels<sup>1</sup>. This again, is poetical, and obviously was never intended for the Anglo-Saxon people; not being in their tongue, but in a cognate dialect from the Gothic stock.

As the scanty remains of Anglo-Saxon biblical literature mount up to a high antiquity, they are not without importance in scriptural research. Use of them has, accordingly, been made in the delicate and difficult task of conjectural emendation<sup>2</sup>. But although these recited to him. A short specimen of his abilities is preserved by Bede. A considerable mass of poetry, on the subjects which occupied his muse, is extant in the Bodleian library, in a MS. referred to the tenth century. This was published by Junius, in 1665, at Amsterdam, without either translation or notes. In 1832, the Society of Antiquaries reprinted it, in London, under the judicious care of Mr. Thorpe, who has improved the text, and added an English translation. Hickes doubted Cædmon's title to the poem, because he considered the language Dano-Saxon, and therefore of a later age. But Mr. Thorpe denies that any Danisms are to be found in the work. Probably any verbal peculiarities, either in Cædmon or Judith, may be accounted-for by the fact, that both are strictly poems. It is undoubtedly far from obvious why Elfric should have written Dano-Saxon. Yet we have his own authority for attributing to him a translation of Judith.—(De Vet. Test. 22.) This can hardly be any other work than that of which a fragment still remains.

Of both the Judith and the Cædmon, long and interesting accounts may be seen in Mr. Turner's Hist. of the Angl.-Sax. (iii. 309.) Of the latter, still fuller particulars are supplied in the Illustrations of Anglo-Saxon Poetry, for which we are indebted to the two Messrs. Conybeare (pp. 3. 183).

A strong similarity has been observed in parts, between Cædmon and Paradise Lost. Hence Mr. Turner supposes that Milton might have had some hints from Junius.—(Hist. Angl.-Sax. iii. 316.) Speculations of this kind might be carried further. The pseudo-gospel of Nicodemus personifies Hell, and makes her (for the gender is feminine) hold a dialogue with Satan. Such reading brings to mind Milton's personification of Sin and Death.

<sup>1</sup> Published at Munich in 1830, by Schmeller, under the title of Heliand. Poema Saxonicum Seculi Noni. The MS. from which this work is printed was formerly in the cathedral library at Bamberg, but is now at Munich. It is published with the advantage of collations from the Cotton MS.

<sup>2</sup> "Various readings from the venerable monuments of English piety can hardly fail of preserving traces of Latin versions now lost, yet St. Jerome's translation was that, in fact, of ancient England<sup>1</sup>. Existing Anglo-Saxon versions, besides, are not sufficiently complete and critical to throw extensive light upon biblical inquiries. The translators evidently had no thought of anything beyond popular utility. They reasoned, probably, that every reader of more than ordinary reflection and acquirements would consult the Latin text. Its language, indeed, had not yet become completely obsolete among persons of education. Hence many liberties were taken, by Elfric, especially, both in paraphrasing and abridging<sup>2</sup>. No doubt a version was thus produced more level to popular apprehension. But its value to a critic is impaired. There can be little certainty as to the text used by a translator who, obviously, considered himself perfectly justified in departing from it to meet the illiteracy of those for whom he wrote.

In this respect, as in others, the Anglo-Saxon age betrays inherent imperfection. It is, however, eminently an interesting and important period: indeed, the cradle of a social system, admired and envied by all Europe. Its monuments, therefore, demand attention from such

---

Anglo-Saxon version of the Four Gospels were first quoted by Mill, who took them from the papers of Marshall."—Bp. MARSH'S Michaelis, ut supra.

<sup>1</sup> Thes Hieronimus wes halig sacerd, and getogen on Ebreiscum gereorde, and on Greciscum, and on Ledenum, fulfremedelic, and he awende ure Bibliothecan of Ebreiscum bocum to Leden sprece.—(Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 34. p.

93.) This Hieronimus was a holy priest, and skilled in the Hebrew language, and in the Greek, and in the Latin, perfectly; and he turned our Bible from Hebrew books to the Latin speech.

<sup>2</sup> He commonly omits indelicate passages, and long successions of proper names. In some cases he introduces a gloss, and in others he gives Anglo-Saxon equivalents for proper names.

as would adequately understand this noble constitution. Especially is examination due to its ecclesiastical affairs. English episcopacy is thus traced beyond Augustine up to a native church, immemorially rooted in the country. This institution, then, has every advantage of prescription, even that of connexion with primitive antiquity. The national endowments of religion, also, meet an inquiring eye under an aspect highly venerable. They challenge any rigour of investigation; offering evidence of legal imposition that gives a modern air to the title-deeds of every private family. Landed acquisitions must have been made universally under existing liabilities to provide for public worship. It should be likewise generally known, that England largely owed conversion to British agency, and that her independence was never insulted by papal domination before the Conquest. Nor, again, ought the doctrinal evidence of Anglo-Saxon records to be overlooked. The Marian martyrs faced an agonizing death rather than deny one leading article of faith maintained by their distant ancestry. Another fact, pregnant with instruction, in the religious annals of ancient England, is her indignant repudiation of image-worship. Her voice, too, in other points now controverted, but which she never saw particularly noticed, responds most ambiguously and insufficiently to the call of Rome for traditionary support. Even the last Henry's monastic policy may appeal for extenuation to Anglo-Saxon history. This displays the Benedictine struggle to undermine an older system, and monks employing an ungenerous detraction, eventually turned with fatal force against themselves. It convicts the cloister, too, of seeking popularity and opulence from the very first, by that debasing subserviency to superstition which dishonoured all its course. Long, then, as Anglo-Saxon times have passed away, their hoary monuments will abundantly requite a student's care. This, indeed, is fairly due to civil institutions in which every Englishman exults, to a religious polity which the great majority reveres. Inquiry may surprise a Romanist with opposition, encountered by some peculiarities of his church, convicting them of innovation; with evidence of others, groping a stealthy and vacillating way through national ignorance and troubles. It will greet a Protestant with invaluable testimonies to the antiquity of his distinctive creed.

END OF THE HISTORY.

APPENDIX.

I.

KING EDGAR'S PROCLAMATION.

<sup>1</sup> HER is geswutelod on thisum gewrite, hu Eadgar cyningc wæs smeagende hwæt to bote mihte, æt tham fær-cwealme, the his leod-scipe swithe drehte and wanode gýnd his anweald.

Thæt is thonne ærest thæt him thukte and his witum, thæt thus gerad ungelimp mid synnum, and mid oferhyrnysse Godes beboda geearnod wære, and swythost mid tham oftige thæs nead-gafoles the Cristene men Gode gelæstan sceoldon on heora teothinge-sceattum. He bethohte and asmeade thæt godcunde be woruld-gewunan. Gif geneat-manna hwile forgymeleasath his hlafordes gafol, and hit to thæm riht andagan ne gelæst, wen is, gif se hlaford mild-heart bith, thæt he tha gymleaste to forgyfenysse læte, and to his gafole buton witnunge fó. Gif he thonne gelomlice, thurh his bydelas, his gafoles myngath, and he thonne aheardath, and hit thencth to æt-strengenne, wen is thæt thæs hlafordes grama to than swithe weaxe, thæt he him ne unne nather ne æhta ne lifes. Swa is wen thæt ure Drihten do, thurh tha gedyrstignysse the folces men with-hæfton thære gelomlican myngunge the ure lareowas dydon ymbe thæt nead-gafol ures Drihtnes, thæt syn ure teothunga, and cyric-sceattas. Thonne beode ic, and se arcebisceop, thæt ge God ne grymman, ne nather ne geearnian ne thone færlican death thises andweardan lifes, ne huru thone towardan ecere helle, mid ænegum oftige Godes gerihta: ac ægther ge earm, ge eadig, the ænige tylunge hæbbe, geleaste Gode his teothunga, mid ealre blisse, and mid eallum unnan, swa seo gerædnys tæce the mine witan æt Andeferan<sup>2</sup> geræddon, and nu eft æt Wihtbordes-stane mid wedde gefæstnodon. Thonne beode ic minum gerefan be minum freond-

<sup>1</sup> Brit. Mus. MSS. Cotton, Nero. E. 1. f. 389. Mr. Thorpe has printed and translated this piece, under the title of Supplement to Edgar's Laws, in the Anc. LL. and Instt. of Engl. i. 271. To it is appended in his work, the declaration of secular rights, which is found in the MS. This, however, was not transcribed for the present volume, on account of its want of connection with the Church. The place at which the second council, or witena- gemot, was holden, has not been identified. Mr. Thorpe seems to have been equally unsuccessful, Wihtbordesstan appearing in his page without any notice. It was, probably, some royal manor, in a southern county.

<sup>2</sup> The legislative importance of Andover is thus commemorated by a poet, who celebrates the dedication of the church of the old monastery at Winchester, in 980; he was, probably, Elfric: [“Post

I.

KING EDGAR'S PROCLAMATION.

HERE is manifested in this writ, how King Eadgar considered what might be for a remedy<sup>3</sup>, in the pestilence that greatly harassed and diminished his people widely through his kingdom.

This is then, first, what he and his witan thought, that this unfortunate state of things was earned by sins, and by disobedience to God's commandments; and chiefly by the subtraction of the bounden tribute which Christian men should yield to God in their tythe-payments. He bethought and considered the divine course by that of the world. If any agricultural tenant neglect his lord's tribute, and render it not to him at the right appointed time, one may think, if the lord be merciful, that he will forgive the neglect, and take his tribute without punishing him. If he then, frequently, through his messengers, admonish him of his tribute, and he then hardeneth himself, and thinketh to hold it out, one may think that the lord's anger will wax to such a pitch, that he will allow him neither property nor life. So, one may think, our Lord will do, through the boldness with which common men resist the frequent admonition which our teachers have given about our Lord's bounden tribute, which are our tythes and church-shots. Then bid I, and the archbishop, that ye provoke not God, nor earn a sudden death in this present life, nor, what is worse, a future one in everlasting hell, by any subtraction of God's rights: but let every one, whether poor or rich, who has any cultivated land, render to God his tythes, with all pleasure and liberality, as the act teaches, which my witan enacted at Andover, and now again at Wihtbordestane with a "Post alii plures aderant, proceresque, ducesque, Gentis et Anglorum maxima pars comitum,

Quos è concilio pariter collegerat illo
Quod fuit vico Regis in Andeveram."

Vita S. Ethelw. Episc. Winton. ACTA
SS. ORD. BENEDICT. SÆC. V. p. 621.

<sup>3</sup> In the former editions of this work, the translation stood "what might be amended." This undoubtedly does not clearly give the sense. Mr. Thorpe's version is, "what might be for a bot." The retention of this Anglo-Saxon word may, however, make readers think of the bots, or satisfactions, continually mentioned in penitential language. But a bot in this sense, was considered as already inflicted by Providence, and the sovereign only sought a remedy for the evils thus brought upon his country. Greater strictness in the discharge of ecclesiastical dues was thought likely to prove such a remedy, and the word bot appears capable of bearing that construction.

scipe, and be eallum tham the hi agon, thæt hi styran ælcum thara the this ne gelæste, and minra witenra wed abrecan mid ænegum wacscipe wille, swa swa him seo forsæde geradnes tæce; and on thære steore ne sy nan forgifnes. Gif he swa earm biþ thæt he ather deth, oþthe tha Godes wanath, his sawla to forwyrde, oþthe waccor mid modes graman he behwyrfth thonne thæt he him to agenum teleth, thonne him micle agenre is thæt him æfre on ecnysse gelæst, gif he hit mid unnan and mid fulre blisse don wolde.

Thonne wille ic thæt thas Godes gerihta standan æghwær gelice on minum anwealde; and tha Godes theowas the tha sceattas underfoth the we Gode syllath, libban clænan life, thæt hy, thurh tha clænnesse, us to God thingian mægen. And ic and mine thegnas wyldan ure preostas, to than the ure saula hyrdas us tæcþ, thæt syndon ure bisceopas, the we næfre mishyran ne scylon on nan thara thinga the hy us for Gode tæcath: thæt we, thurh tha hyrsomnysse the we heom for Gode hyrsomiath, thæt ece life gearnian the hy us to-wemath mid lare, and mid bysene goddra weorca.

---

pledge confirmed. Moreover, I bid my reeves by my friendship, and by all that they possess, that they punish every one of those who pay not this, and break the pledge of my witan with any prevarication, even as the foresaid enactment teaches; and in the punishment let there be no forgiveness. Whether a man may be so poor as to be tempted into encroachments upon that which is God's, to the ruin of his soul, or so hasty-tempered as to think little of that which he does not consider as his own, that surely must be more his own which lasts for ever, if it be done with a truly cheerful mind.

Then will I that God's rights stand everywhere alike in my dominions; and that God's servants, who receive the payments that we make to God, should live clean lives, that they should through their purity intercede for us to God. And I and my thanes enjoin our priests what is taught us by the pastors of our souls, that is, our bishops, whom we should never fail of hearing in any of the things that they teach us for God, that we, through the obedience that we yield to them for God, may earn the everlasting life which they persuade us to by teaching, and by the example of good works.

---

II.

DE SECUNDA EPISTOLA,

QUANDO DIVIDITUR CRISMA<sup>1</sup>.

EALA ge mæsse-preostas, mine gebrothru, we secgath eow nu thæt we ær ne sædon; fortham the we to-dæg sceolon dælan urne ele, on threo wisan gehalgodne, swa swa us gewissath seo boc, id est, Oleum sanctum, et Oleum crismatis, et Oleum infirmorum: Thæt is, Halig ele, oþer is Crisma, and Seocra manna ele: and ge sceolon habban threo ampollon gearwe to tham thrym elum, fortham the we ne durron don hi togædere on anum elefate, fortham the heora ælc biþ gehalgod on sundron to synderlicre thenunge.

Mid tham halgan ele ge sceolon tha hæthenan cild mearcian on tham breoste, and betwux tha sculdru on middewardan mid rode-tacne ærtham the ge hit fullion on tham fant-wætere; and thonne hit of tham wætere cymth ge sceolon wyrcean rode-tacn on tham hæfde mid tham halgan crisman. On tham halgan fante, ærtham the ge fullion, ge sceolon don crisman on Cristes rode-tacn, and man ne mot besprengan men mid tham fant-wætere syththan se crisma biþ thæron gedon.

Mid seocra manna ele ge sceolon smyrian tha seocan, swa swa Jacob se apostol on his pistole tæhte: Ut allevet eos Dominus, et si in peccatis sint, dimittentur eis. Thæt hi arære Drihten fram heora seocnysse, and gif hi on synnum syndon, thæt hi beon forgifene.

Man sceal huslian thone seocan tha hwile he hit forselgan mæg, and man hit ne sceal na don nanum sam-cucan men, forthan the he hit sceal etan, swa swa ure Drihten quæth, Qui manducat car-

<sup>1</sup> Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii, 121, f. 111. Immediately after the title, the following words are written in a hand, apparently of the sixteenth, or the early part of the seventeenth century: "This epistle Aelfrike sent to Wulfstanus, archbysshoppe of Yorke, as it appeareth by a boke of Exeter churchē."

<sup>2</sup> That is, the unbaptised child. This is obvious from Elfric's Epistle to Wulf-sine, commonly called his Canons, can.

26, which enacts, "if an unbaptised child be suddenly brought to the mass-priest, that he must baptise it forthwith with haste, that it die not heathen."—(SPELMAN. 579. Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, ii. 353.) The oil to be used in marking a child before baptism, was called oleum catechumenorum, as well as oleum sanctum. It was mere oil blessed by the bishop for that particular purpose. The practice

II.

ELFRIC'S SECOND EPISTLE,

DELIVERED AT THE DISTRIBUTION OF CHRISM.

O YE mass-priests, my brethren, we will say to you now that which we have not said before; because to-day we have to distribute our oil, hallowed in three ways, as the book directs us: id est, Oleum sanctum, et Oleum chrismatis, et Oleum infirmorum; That is, Holy oil; secondly, Chrism; thirdly, Sick men's oil: and you should have three phials ready for the three oils, for we dare not put them together in one oil vessel, because each is hallowed separately for a separate ministration.

With the holy oil ye should mark the heathen<sup>2</sup> child on his breast, and midway between his shoulders, with the sign of a cross, ere ye baptise it in the font-water: and when it comes out of the water, ye should make the sign of a cross on the head with the holy chrism<sup>3</sup>. In the holy font, before ye baptise, ye should put chrism in the form of Christ's cross, and people may not be sprinkled with font-water, after chrism has been put therein.

With sick men's oil<sup>4</sup> ye should anoint the sick, as James the Apostle taught in his epistle: Ut allevet eos Dominus, et si in peccatis sint, dimittentur eis. That the Lord would raise them, and if they be in sins, they shall be forgiven them.

The sacrament should be administered, while the sick can swallow it, and never to any who are half alive; because it must be eaten, according to that saying of our Lord's, Qui of thus anointing catechumens is said by Romanists to be at least as old as Tertullian's time: but this is not clear, and is consequently disputed.—DURANT. De Ritt. Eccl. Cath. 112. DURAND. Rationale, l. 6. BINGHAM. i. 514.

<sup>3</sup> Chrism is a mixture of oil and balsam.—DURAND.

<sup>4</sup> Oleum infirmorum is mere oil, but not blessed at the same time with the

oleum catechumenorum, though on the same day, Maundy Thursday, and as a part of the same ceremony. The Anglo-Saxons were rather afraid of this unction, and sometimes would not admit it in sickness.—(Anc. LL. and Instt. of Engl. ii. 355.) The Pontifical directs that three several vessels of liquor shall be provided for the ceremonies of that day, of which that, containing chrism, shall be the largest.

nem meam, et bibit sanguinem meum, in me manet, et ego in eo: Se the ytt min flæsc, and drincth min blod, se wunath on me, ac ic wunige on him. Sume seoce synd swa dysige thæt hi ondrædath him thæt hi sceolon sweltan sona for tham husle: ac we secgath to sothan thæt he ne swelt forthig, theah the he ælce dæge underfo thæt husel: ac his synna beoth adilegode thurh thone drihtenlican hlaf, and he bith eac gescyld with deofles syrunga.

Se seoca man sceal swithe behreowsian his ærran synna, and geswicennysse behatan, and he mot hi andettan oth tha nehstan orthunge, and he sceal forgifan eallum tham mannum the him ær abulgon, and biddan him forgifennysse.

Ge sceolon huslian tha cild thonne hi gefullode beoth, and hy man bere to mæssan thæt hi beon gehuslode ealle tha seofon dagas tha hwile the hi unthwogene beoth.

Ge ne moton mæssian, on læwedra manna husum, ne man ne mot drincan, ne dwollice plegan, ne etan innan circean, ne unnytte word spræcan, ac hine gebiddan, forthan the se Hælend adræfde of tham halgan temple, ealle tha gedwolan, mid heora gedwyld, and cwæth, Min hus, is gecweden gebed-hus.

In Cena  $\overline{\text{Dni}}$ , et in Parasceve, et in  $\overline{\text{Sco}}$  Sabbato.

On thissum thrym swige-nihtum, ge sceolon singan ætgædere

<sup>1</sup> A like adherence to the mere letter of Scripture produced the communion of infants.—(See the Author's Bampton Lectures. 82.) If Romanists would only candidly consider Christian antiquities, they might learn from these departures of their church from a servile adherence to words, to doubt the wisdom of continuing such servility in the case of transubstantiation.

<sup>2</sup> The superstition of remaining unwashed during the week following baptism, though long out of use among Romanists, is at least as old as Tertullian's time.—DALLÆUS. De Cultt. 78. BISHOP KAYE'S Tertullian. 431.

<sup>3</sup> This has been arranged as verse, which is evidently its character. Some similar matter, which Mr. Thorpe has arranged metrically, is to be found in Elfric's Epistle to Wulfsine, generally called his Canons.—(Anc. LL. and Instt. ii. 356.) Probably both cases present a citation from some well-known metrical piece. At the conclusion of these lines, Mr. Thorpe's edition of this Epistle concludes, as does that published by Wilkins in his Leges Angl.-Sax. Mr. Thorpe, indeed, does not think that Elfric's composition goes farther than the end of the third paragraph, which prescribes the use of sick man's oil. "What follows," he says, "has been apparently added by the copyist to the tract about chrism by mistake, having no connexion with it." But neither in the Bodleian MS. (Junius, 121,) from which the transcript now published, was made, nor in another in that library, (BODLEY, 343,) is there any break, even after the manducat carnem meam, et bibit sanguinem meum, in me manet, et ego in eo. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I abide in him<sup>1</sup>. Some sick are so foolish, that they have a dread of dying the sooner for the sacrament: but we say in sooth, that a man would not die on that account, although he received the sacrament every day: his sins, however, would be blotted out by the Lord's bread, and he would also be shielded against the devil's snares.

The sick man should earnestly repent of his former sins, and promise to leave them, and he ought to confess them until his last breath; and he should forgive all that have ever offended him, and pray that they may be forgiven.

Ye should give the eucharist to children when they are baptised, and let them be brought to mass, that they may receive it all the seven days that they are unwashed<sup>2</sup>.

Ye must not mass	Because the Saviour
In laymen's houses,	Drove from his temple,
Nor must one drink,	All the foolish,
Or play the fool,	With their follies,
Or eat in churches,	And quoth, My house
Or talk absurdly,	Is call'd a prayer-house <sup>3</sup> .
But therein pray;

On the Lord's Supper-Day<sup>4</sup>, the Preparation<sup>5</sup>, and the holy Sabbath<sup>6</sup>.

On these three nights of silence<sup>7</sup>, ye should sing together in metrical lines. The whole epistle, indeed, as it is called, is perfectly suited to one single occasion, that of giving useful advice and information to a body of clergymen brought together for receiving the annual supplies of consecrated oil and chrism. It begins with topics suggested by the particular business in hand, and goes on to other matters of professional interest.

<sup>4</sup> Thursday in Passion week, so called because Jesus then took his last paschal meal, and grafted upon it the Christian Eucharist.

<sup>5</sup> Good Friday; the day which it commemorates is called παρασκευή του πάσχα by St. John. xix. 14.

<sup>6</sup> Saturday in Passion week; it was called holy on several accounts, particularly because it was a great day for the administration of baptism.—(Du CANGE.) Saturday was ordinarily called Sabbatum in ecclesiastical language.

<sup>7</sup> Besides the general injunction of silence in the ordinary business of life, and in various ritual matters, even the bells were to remain silent from the Thursday evening, which commemorated our Lord's betrayal, to the following Sunday morning. Nothing more, probably, was at first meant by this, than to impress a character of unusual solemnity upon the season, but it was eventually said, that men were thus to be reminded of the time when the preaching of the Gospel wholly ceased; Jesus himself being actually dead during most of it, and his disciples all along, being dispersed panic-stricken.—DURAND.

be fullan eowerne uht-sang, swa swa se antemnera tæceth, and feower and twentig candela acwencan æt tham sealnum, and æt ælcere rædunge oth thone æftemestan antifon, and ge-endian thone uht-sang, swa thæt ælc singe his Pater noster on sundron and tha preces therto, butan ælcum leohte, licgende on cncowum. On tham Thunres-dæge ge singath ætgædere ealle eowre tid-sangas. Singath swa theah æfre Pat. nst. and tha preces on sundron, buton tham uht-sange. On Frige-dæge, and on Sæternes-dæge, singath eowre tid-sangas ælc preost on sundron, buton tham uht-sange. On Thunres-dæge ge sceolon athwean eowre weofodu ær tham the ge mæssion, and ge elles ne moton. And æfter efen-sange ge sceolon unscridan tha weofodu, and standan hi swa nacode oth thone Sæternes-dæg, and man tha weofod-sceatas awahse betwux tham, and healdath on tham dæge eower fæsten oth non.

Imple mandatum Dni, in cena ipsius. Doth on tham Thunres-dæge swa swa ure Drihten bebead. Athweath thearfena fet, and heom fodan doth, scrud gif eow to onhagie, and eow betwynan eowre fet athweath mid eadmodnysse, swa swa Crist sylf dyde, and us swa don het.

On tham dæge ge ne moton cwethan æt thære mæssan, Dns vobiscum, buton se biscop ana the thone ele halgath, ne eac ge <sup>1</sup> Uht-sang was the first service in the twenty-four hours, and was performed some time between midnight and day-break.

<sup>2</sup> This superstitious formality is thus described in the work De Divinis Officiis; which once passed under the name of Alcuin. "Accenduntur in hac nocte lumina viginti-quatuor, et extinguuntur per singulas lectiones et responsoria. Quæ fiunt septuagintaduæ illuminationes et extinctiones; tot enim horis jacuit Dominus in sepulchro. Lumen et cantus gaudium et lætitiâ significat: extinctio luminum defectio septuaginta-duo discipulorum, sive mæstitiam Apostolorum quam pertulerunt per septuaginta-duas horas, quæ consecratæ sunt Christi sepulturæ. Hoc enim ordine per singulas noctes extinguuntur. In initio primi Psalmi, est custos paratus cum canna in loco dexteræ partis ecclesiæ, et mox ut primam antiphonam audierit, extinguit primam lucernam. In fine vero sequentis Psalmi ex parte sinistra tutat aliam, in medio tertiam.

Hoc ordine de aliis prosequitur. His omnibus extinctis, simili modo in matutinis per singulas antiphonas extinguuntur. Dicto autem versu ante Evangelium, subtrahitur media, et reservatur usque in Sabbatum sanctum." —ALCUIN. Opp. ii. 476.

<sup>3</sup> The canonical hours, though sometimes reckoned eight, are generally reckoned only seven. They stand thus in Elfric's epistle, styled by Mr. Thorpe his Pastoral Epistle, which has a Latin prologue to Archbishop Wulfstan. Uht-sang, (Matins and Lauds,) Prim-sang, (Prime,) Undern-sang, (Tierce,) Mid-dæg-sang, (Sext,) Non-sang, (Nones,) Æfen-sang, (Vespers,) and Niht-sang, (Complin.) Hicckes, in the Appendix to his Letters to a Popish Priest, has printed the Saxon services for the canonical hours; but in these Uht-sang stands last. Prim-sang was sometimes called Dæg-red (Day-red) sang: a term expressive of the time, (day-break,) when it was ordinarily chanted.—Anc. LL. and Instt. ii. 376. FOSBROOKE. British Monachism. Lond. 1817, p. 53.

full your midnight service<sup>1</sup>, as the anthem-book teaches, and extinguish four-and-twenty candles at the Psalms, and at every reading, until the last antiphon<sup>2</sup>, and end the service, so that each sing his Lord's Prayer apart, and the prayers thereto, without any light, kneeling on your knees. On the Thursday, ye shall sing together all your canonical hours<sup>3</sup>. Sing nevertheless the Lord's Prayer, and its prayers apart. On Friday, and on Saturday, sing your services for the hours, each priest apart, except the midnight service. On Thursday, ye should wash your altars, before ye mass, which else ye must not do. And after evensong, ye should uncover the altars, and let them stand naked until Saturday<sup>4</sup>, and in the mean time the altar-sheets are to be washed: and keep on that day your fast until noon.

Imple mandatum<sup>5</sup> Domini, in cœna ipsius. Do on the Thursday even as our Lord bade. Wash the feet of the poor, and give them food, clothing, if you have opportunity, and wash one another's feet with humility, even as Christ himself did, and commanded us to do so.

On that day ye must not say at mass Dñs vobiscum, but the bishop only who hallows the oil, nor should ye go to pacem<sup>6</sup>, <sup>4</sup> The real reason of this was probably to make them present a handsome appearance when the church should fill for the great baptism on Holy Saturday, but reasons for it were found in the circumstances of our Lord, who was, as at that time, stripped of his disciples, or on the next day, of his own clothes, for crucifixion, or of his glory on the cross, as appeared by his crying, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

<sup>5</sup> This passage might seem conclusive, especially as much corroborative matter is to be found, of the etymology of Maundy, applied to this particular Thursday. It seems to be from mandatum, the new commandment given by our Lord at his last supper, (St. Joh. xiii. 34,) and which was interpreted not merely as a general commandment to mutual love, but also as a special direction to wash one another's feet, after our Lord's example a short time before. Undoubtedly Elfric enjoins that relief should be given to the poor in addition to the washing of their feet, and a mand, or basket, might be provided for carrying it away, but mandatum, the divine command for all this humiliation and liberality, affords the best clue to the name, among other reasons, because it accounts for both syllables of it. The day is more likely to be called mandate, corrupted into mandy Thursday, than basket Thursday.

<sup>6</sup> The osculum pacis, as it was called, or holy kiss, enjoined in Rom. xvi. 16, and elsewhere in the New Testament. Anciently, at the communion service, or mass, in the Roman church, the officiating priest kissed one of his assistants, he another, and that other a third, which form went on through the whole congregation. But as simplicity declined, the ceremony was found productive of obvious inconveniences. To remedy these, a figure of Christ, or the cross, or a case of relics, called an osculatory, or pax, was eventually handed round to be kissed. Neither anciently the substance, nor subsequently the shadow of the holy kiss

ne sculon gan to pacem, ac thær man thone ele halgath man sceal cyssan tha fatu. Ge sceolon healdan of tham husle ge halgiath thæs dæges to thicgenne on Frigedæge æt thære thenunge, fortham the man ne mot halgian nan husel on tham dæge the Crist on throwode for ure alysednysse. On Frigedæge ær none at fruman man sceal rædan thæs witegan rædinge, In tribulatione sua mane, and syththan thone traht singan, Dne audiui: æfter tham trahte, Flectamus genua, and tha collectan, Ds a quo et Judas, eft othre rædinge, Dixit Dns ad Moysen et Aaron, and thone traht, Eripe me, Deus. Ræde man thonne Cristes throwunge be Johannes gesetnysse: æt thære man ne sceal cwethan Dns vobiscum, ne Gloria Deo. Æfter thisum cwethe se preost tha collectan swa swa se mæsse-boc him tæceth. Æfter tham beron twegen gebrothra tha rode forth mid hrægle bewæfed, and singon tha fers, Populem s̄, and twegen gebrothru him andwerdon on Grecisc, Agios o Theos, oth ende, and hi ealle thonne thæt ilce singon on Leden, Scs Ds, Scs fortis: thonne that other fers, Quia eduxi vos, thonne eft, Agios o Theos, and Scs Ds, thonne thriddede fers, Quid ultra debui, and Agios, and Scs. Unwreon thonne tha rode, and singon, Ecce lignum crucis, and tha othre antiphonas, tha hwile the tha gebrothru hi gebiddath æt<sup>3</sup> thære rode, and thæt læwede folc eall swa do. Lecge se diacon syththan corporale uppon tham weofode mid tham husle the wæs on tham ærran dæge gehalgod, and sette thone calic thæron mid ungehalgodum wine, and cwethe se mæsse-preost besone, Oremus preceptis salutaribus moniti, and Pater nr oth ende. Cwæthe thonne fægge, Libera nos, quesumus, Dne ab omnibus malis, eft syththan besone, Per omnia secula seculorum. Do se mæsse-preost thonne of tham husle mid swigan into tham calice, and gange he to husle and ealle tha gebrothru. Singon syththan heora æfen-sang, ælc on sundron, and gan to heora gereorde. And ne beo heora nan gescod thæs dæges, buton he untrum sy, ær tham the hit gefylled sy.

was used on Good Friday; Bona says, as a token of sorrow, Durand, and the pseudo-Alcuin, as a memorial of Judas Iscariot's betrayal of Christ with a kiss.

<sup>1</sup> Durand, citing Pope Innocent, makes this typical of the withdrawal of the Apostles from notice in grief and consternation, in the interval between our Lord's apprehension, and his resurrection. Raban Maur also makes it typical of their total abstinence from food, during that interval.—De Inst. Clerr. Col. 1532, p. 103.

<sup>2</sup> "Tracts are certain sentences to be sung after the Epistle."—JOHNSON.

<sup>3</sup> Some MSS. have here to thære rode, which Johnson translates "to the rood," and accordingly remarks in a

but where the oil is hallowed the vessels should be kissed. Ye should keep some of the eucharist ye hallow this day for receiving in Friday's service, because no eucharist must be hallowed on the day in which Christ suffered for our redemption<sup>1</sup>. On Friday, before nones, should be first read a lesson from the prophet, In tribulatione sua mane, and then should be sung the tract, Dñe audivi: after the tract, Flectamus genua, and the collect, Ds a quo et Judas: then another lesson, Dixit Dñs ad Moysen et Aaron, and the tract<sup>2</sup>, Eripe me, Deus. Then should be read Christ's passion according to John's relation; at which should not be said, Dñs vobiscum, or Gloria Deo. After this let the priest say the collect according as the mass-book teaches him. Afterwards let two brothers bear the cross forth covered with a veil, and sing the verse, Popule m̄s, and let two brothers answer them in Greek, Agios o Theos, to the end, and then let them all sing the same in Latin, Sc̄s Ds, Sc̄s fortis: then that other verse, Quia eduxi vos, then again, Agios o Theos, and Sc̄s Ds, then a third verse, Quid ultra debui, and Agios, and Sc̄s. Then let them uncover the cross, and sing, Ecce lignum crucis, and the other antiphons, while the brothers pray by the cross, and the lay folk also. Let the deacon then lay a corporal<sup>4</sup> upon the altar with the eucharist that was hallowed on the day before, and let him place the chalice thereon with unconsecrated wine, and let the mass-priest say quickly, Oremus preceptis salutaribus moniti, and Pater n̄r to the end. Let him then say slowly, Libera nos, quesumus, Dñe ab omnib. malis, then again quickly, Per omnia secula seculorum. Let the mass-priest then put some of the eucharist with silence into the chalice, and let him go to communion with all the brethren. Let them then sing their even-song, each apart, and go to their supper, and let no one of them be shod on that day, unless he be weakly, until all is over.

note, "The Good Friday service seems to me the very worst that is in the whole year, save that there is on this day no elevation of the host, nor by consequence, any divine honour required to be paid to it. But the honours paid to the cross are a full compensation for that defect." Æt. however, has no meaning that will warrant this construction, nor probably has to. Nothing seems to be meant farther than that prayers should be said by the cross, a usage undoubtedly, that led to idolatry, but it is not in itself idolatrous.

<sup>4</sup> A linen cloth for the altar, answering, say Raban Maur and the pseudo-Alcuin, to the linen cloth, in which our Lord's body was wrapped. Hence it must not be silk, or coloured cloth.

On Easter-efen man sceal halgian ærest taper, and syththan rædan tha rædinge, In principio creavit D̄s celum et terram. Don syththan tha thenunge swa eower bec eow tæcath, ac ge ne sceolon singan offerendan on tham dæge, ne Agnus D̄i, ne communionian, ne gan to pacem. Singan swa theah Gloria in excelsis D̄o. Æfter tham husel-gange singath Alleluia besone, and thone sceortan sealm thær-mid, Laudate D̄nm om̄s gentes. Aginnan syththan thone antiphon, Vespere autem Sabbati, and ful singan Magnificat. Æfter tham antiphone cwethe se mæsse-preost tha collectan p<sup>o</sup> communionem, and geendige swa tha mæssan, and thone æfen-sang mid anre collectan.

Se mæsse-preost sceal halgian sealt and wæter on ælcum Sunnan-dæge, ær tham the he mæssige, and stredan geond tha cyrcean, and ofer thæt folc, and healdan thæt wæter, gif hit swa habban wille, oth thæt he othar halgie on tham othrum Sunnan-dæge.

Man sceal to mæssan don gemencged win and wæter togædere wel clænlice, fortham the thæt win getacnath ure alysednesse thurk thæs Hælende's blode, the he for us ageat, and thæt wæter getacnath witodlice thæt folc the Crist alyse mid his lyffæstan blode. Gif hwa win næbbe ofer ealne thone gear, he nimie linen-brægel the to note ær ne com, and bedyppe on win thæt he thurk wæt sy, drige thonne on sunnan, and dyppe hine othar sythe, drige hine eft, and dyppe thriddan sithe, drige thonne on thære hatan sunnan, healde hine clænlice, and on clænum wætere wæte of tham clathe, and wringe on his calice; do swa lytlum and lytlum oth thæt se clath sy asoht.

Se preost sceal hagian thæt he his offrunga do swithe clænlice

<sup>1</sup> As a preliminary to this hallowing, Durand says, (Rationale, l. 6,) that all the lights in the church should be extinguished, and a fresh light struck for communicating to the paschal taper, and thence to other candles. Durant, (De Ritt. 56,) suggests a reason for this in a tale once current in Jerusalem, respecting Narcissus, bishop there at the close of the second century. Oil being deficient for the services of Easter-eve, to the people's great concern, Narcissus desired the lamps to be replenished by water, which his prayers quickly converted into oil. The story is found in Eusebius, (Hist. Eccl. vi. 9,) but the historian's belief in it may be doubted, as he places it among wonderful things traditionally connected with the name of Narcissus among the people of his city. The real origin of the taper ceremonies on Easter eve may be much more conclusively traced to Pagan times. A notion was then common that fire was the first principle of all things, and the superstitious care with which the sacred fire was kept by the vestal virgins of ancient Rome is well known. This fire was, however, always lighted afresh on the

On Easter-eve shall first be a taper hallowed, and then the lesson read, In principio creavit Ds celum et terram<sup>1</sup>. Let the service afterwards be performed as your books teach you, but you must not sing the offertory on that day, nor the Agnus Di, nor the Communia, nor go to the kiss of peace. Sing, however, Gloria in excelsis Do. After going to the sacrament immediately sing Alleluia; and the short psalm therewith, Laudate Dnm oms gentes. Let then be begun the antiphon, Vespere autem Sabbati, and let the Magnificat be fully sung. After the antiphon, let the mass-priest say the post-communion collect, and thus end the mass, and the even-song with a collect.

The mass-priest shall hallow salt and water on every Sunday, before he masses, and sprinkle it all over the church, and over the people, and keep that water, if he would have it so, until he hallows more on another Sunday<sup>2</sup>.

Wine and water, well and cleanly mingled together, must be used at mass, because the wine betokeneth our redemption through the Saviour's blood, which he shed for us, and the water is an expressive token of the people whom Christ redeemed with his vivifying blood. If any one has not wine for all the year, let him take a linen cloth that has never been in use, and dip it in wine till it is wet through, then dry it in the sun, and dip it another time, dry it again, and dip it a third time, then dry it in the hot sun, keep it cleanly, and in clean water let him wet the cloth, and wring it into his chalice: let this be done by little and little until the cloth is squeezed out.

The priest should be careful to make his offerings<sup>3</sup> very

---

1st of March, a day, when opening spring reminded one of creation, and which is commonly at that sort of distance from Easter that might readily tempt Christian teachers into the specious impolicy of transferring its popular ceremonial to their own Church's festival. For assigning this origin to the taper ceremonies, the lesson then to be read from the first of Genesis is a strong confirmation. The ancient Pagans, in fact, sometimes identified fire with the earth. Hence Ovid says, (Fasti, vi. 460,) . . . . . et Tellus Vestaque numen idem est. The generation of fire from flint and steel did not inaptly, therefore, upon this principle, represent the creation of the earth.

<sup>2</sup> From this passage it might seem that holy water, as Romanists call this mixture, was not placed at the entrance of churches in Elfric's time. Durant cites various accounts of its power in driving away demons, changing a mare into a woman that had been a woman before, and curing diseases.—(De Rit. 146.) But he omits Raban Maur's good opinion of it as a cattle medicine.—De Inst. Clerr. 132.

<sup>3</sup> The offerings of a priest appear

thurh clath geseohtod, and his ofsetan ne beon to eald-bacene, and he athwea his calice æfre embe vii night; forthan se witega secth, thæt se bith awyrgeð se the Godes thenunge deth mid gymeleaste. Forthi ne mot nan blind preost mæssian næffre, forthan the he ne gesihth hwæt he sylf offrath. Micele mede gearniath æt tham Ælmihtigan Gode the him clænlice thenath æt his clænan weofode, and tham folce deth for Gode tha thenunga the to cyrcean gebyrath on asettum timan, and genoh halig byth tham the hylt his clænnysse, and Gode swa thenath on his gastlican theowdome, gyf he fram heafod leahtrum gehealden bith. Nu cwyrth, ic wene, eower sum to me, We nabbath thone fultum thæt we this forthbringan magon, thonne we standath ana æt urum weofode. And ic secge eow thæt ge sceolon læran cnapan and geonge menn eow to fultume, thæt hi æfter eow don tha ylcan thenunga: na eower agene cild the ge unrihlice gestrynath, ac tha ælfremedan, thæt hi eowre cild beon thurh tha gastlican lare, and ge beoth thonne lareowas, and ge magon swa begytan tha mæstan gethincthu, and swa swa Daniel se witega on his witegunge gesette, Quia autem docti fuerunt, fulgebunt quasi splendor firmamenti, et qui ad justitiam erudiunt multos quasi stelle in perpetuas æternitates. Thæt is on Engliscere spræce, Tha tha gelærede beoth hi scinath swa beorhte swa swa thæs roderes beorhtness, and tha tha manega lærath on thisum life to wisdome tha scinath swa swa steorran sothlice on ecenyse. Ne most thu na ana mæssian buton man the andwerde, theah the thu for uncystric habban nelle, oththe thu for Godes lufan othre læran nelle, ac healtast Godes pund on thinum swat-clathe, the to ecum wite, swa swa us secth thæt Godspell.

from the Ordo Romanus, cited by Daillé, to have been only bread. In England, he was to bake the ofsets himself, or have them baked under his own eyes.—(Anc. LL. and Instt. ii. 405.) Nothing is said of their being unleavened. Every communicant was bound to offer, hence the parents of infant communicants were to offer for them. Nothing was in very early times accepted at the offertory except bread and wine, of which a sufficiency was used at the sacrament, and the remainder distributed among the officiating clergy, or poor, or both. Oblations offered by non-communicants were refused, and for the purpose of avoiding mistakes, the offerings were first brought into the vestry, and such of them as were accepted, were taken by the chief deacon to the altar. As communions gradually glided into the exhibitions, now called masses among Romanists, oblations of sacramental elements wore out, and other things were taken: hence the fifth Council of Rome, holden under Gregory VII. in 1078, enjoined that something should be offered by every Christian at mass. This is evidently a release from the necessity of offering the sacramental elements. Probably, many wealthy persons had long offered something more acceptable to the cleanly through a soaked cloth, and let not his oflets<sup>1</sup> be too old-baken, and let him wash his chalice always about once a se'enight; for the prophet saith that he is accursed who doth God's service with carelessness. Therefore no blind priest must ever mass, because he sees not what he himself is offering. A great reward he earns with Almighty God, who serves him purely at his pure altar, and does for the people on God's behalf those services which belong to the church at the set times, being sufficiently hallowed in keeping himself pure, and serving God in his ghostly service, free from serious vices. Now say, I ween, some of you to me, We have not the help to accomplish all this, when we stand alone at our altar. And I say to you that ye should teach lads and young men to help you, that they after you may perform the same ministrations: not your own children whom ye improperly beget, but strangers who may be your children through spiritual instruction: then you really would be teachers, and might so gain the greatest credit, as you may thus learn from the prophecy of Daniel the prophet, Quia autem docti fuerunt, fulgebunt quasi splendor firmamenti, et qui ad justitiam erudiunt multos quasi stelle in perpetuas æternitates. That is in English speech, Because they were learned, they shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and those who instruct many in this life to justice, shall shine verily as the stars for ever and ever. Thou must not mass alone without one to make the responses to thee, however unwilling thou mayest be from parsimony to have a clerk, or for the love of God to teach others, holding God's pound in thy napkin, to thy eternal punishment, as the Gospel tells us.

---

clergy, for Walafrid Strabo, in the ninth century, finds fault with such as offer inordinately, but sometimes will not stay to communicate: a plain proof, by the way, that the ninth century knew nothing of the modern Romish fashion, of remaining in communion time, merely to look on. In Gregory the Great's time, non-communicants were sent out of church before the sacrament was administered, or in modern Romish language, before mass was begun, by the following notice from the deacon, Si quis non communicat, det locum.—(GREG. M. Diall. lib. 2, cap. 23. Opp. Paris. 1571, p. 970.) Perhaps it may be thought that some especial communion day may be meant. But the pope says, this notice was ex more, cum missarum solemnia celebrarentur. What would be said now of such an order before the ceremony called mass?—DAL-LEUS. De Cultt. 289. BONA. De Rerr. Liturg. 201, 395. LABB. et COSS. Concc. x. 374. Bampt. Lect. 1830, p. 110.

<sup>1</sup> See p. 237. The oflet was of a round figure, and baked expressly for the purpose. Some of these sacramental cakes were often placed in the coffins of deceased priests.—MABILLON. An-nall. Bened. ii. 219.

Sume preostas gefyllath heora husel-box on Eastron, and healdath ofer twelf monath to untrumum mannum, swilce thæt husel sy haligre thonne oþer, ac hi doth unwislice, forþan the hit wannath, oþthe mid ealle forrotath, on swa langsum fyrste, and he biþ thonne scyldig, swa swa us secth seo boc. Se the husel forhyt, oþthe hi forlist, oþthe hit mys eton, oþthe oþre nytenu, sceawa tha penitentialem hwæt he seghþ be thisum. Eal swa halig is thæt husel the biþ gehalgod to-dæg, swa thæt the biþ gehalgod on tham halgan Easter-dæge. Healdath forthig, ic bidde, thone halgan Cristes lichaman mid maran wisdomes to seocum mannum fram Sunnan-dæge to Sunnan-dæge on swithe clænum boxe, oþthe be tham mæstan, feowertyneniht, and thicgath hit thonne, and lecgath thær oþer. We habbath bysene be tham on Moyses bocum, swa swa God sylf bebead on Moyses æ, thæt se sacerd sceolde on ælcum Sæternes-dæge settan twelf hlafas on tham tabernaculo, ealle nibacene, tha wæron gehatene panes propositionis, and hi sceoldon standan thær on Godes getealde oþ oþerne Sæternes-dæg, and etan hi thonne tha sacerdas sylfe, and settan thær oþre. Sume preostas nellath thicgan thæt husel thæt hi halgiath. Nu wille we eow secgan hu se boc seghþ be tham, Presbiter missam celebrans, et non audens sumere sacrificium, accusante conscientia sua, anathema est: Se mæsse-preost the mæssiath, and ne deær thæt husel thicgan, wat hine scildigne: se is amansumod. Læsse pleoh is to thicgenne thæt husel thonne to halgienne. Se the æniges thinges onbyrighþ, ætes oþthe wætes, ostran oþthe ofæt, wines oþthe wæteres, ne ræde he pistol ne godspell to mæssian. Gif hit hwa thonne deth, he unarwurthath God, and mid thære dyrstignysse hine sylfne fordeth. Se the turca halgath

<sup>1</sup> All the preceding paragraph occurs with scarcely a variation in Elfric's Epistle to Wulfine, commonly called his Canons.

<sup>2</sup> Raban Maur, evidently using the words of Isidore, thus deals with the term sacrificium eucharistically taken. "Sacrificium dictum, quasi sacrum factum, quod prece mystica consecratur in memoriam dnicæ passionis, unde hoc, eo jubente, in corpus Christi et sanguinem Dñi, quod dum sit ex fructibus terræ sanctificatur, et fit sacramentum, operante invisibiliter Spiritu Dei."—(De Inst. Clerr. 57.) Cyprian also, blaming a wealthy female who came to communicate without an offering of her own, says to her in a well-known passage, sine sacrificio venis.—(DALIÆUS. De Cult. 290.) By the sacrifice, therefore, was often understood anciently the ante-oblation, or material offering which communicants brought, and the priest consecrated, if necessary, if not, set aside for the purposes of religion, or charity. The post-oblation follows consecration, and is eucharistic and commemorative.

<sup>3</sup> For this practice of receiving the Eucharist fasting, the second council of Mâcon, holden in 585, gives the following reason: "Injustum enim est, ut spiritali alimento corporale præponatur."—(LABR. et COSS. v. 982.)

Some priests fill their eucharist-box at Easter, and keep it over twelve months for sick men, as if that eucharist were holier than other: but they do unwisely, for it loses its colour, or becomes rotten all over, in so long a space, and the individual is then to blame, even as the book tells us. He who overkeeps the eucharist, or loses it, or mice eat it, or other animals, consider the Penitential what it says of these things. Just as holy is the eucharist that is hallowed to-day, as that which is hallowed on the holy Easter-day. Keep, therefore, I pray, the holy body of Christ with more wisdom for sick men, from Sunday to Sunday, in a very clean box, or at the most, for a fortnight, and then receive it, and lay some more there<sup>1</sup>. We have an example in the books of Moses, even among the legal commands given there by God himself, that the priest should, on every Saturday, set twelve loaves in the tabernaculo, all new-baken, which were called panes propositionis, and which should stand there in God's tabernacle until another Saturday, when the priests themselves should eat them, and set others there. Some priests will not receive the eucharist which they hallow. Now will we tell you how the book saith about them, Presbiter missam celebrans, et non audens sumere sacrificium<sup>2</sup>, accusante conscientia sua, anathema est: The mass-priest who masseth, and dares not receive the eucharist, knows himself guilty: he is excommunicated. Less danger is it to receive the eucharist than to hallow it. He who tastes any thing, solid or liquid, oyster or fruit, wine or water, let him not read the epistle or gospel at mass. If any one do so then, he affronts God, and by this presumption he undoes himself<sup>3</sup>. He who hallows twice one

---

The usage, therefore, seems to have turned upon a superstitious notion, that food of a sacred character should take precedence of any merely natural. It is, however, observable, that neither the fathers at Mâcon, nor a previous canon of the African church cited by them, enjoin fasting upon ordinary communicants, but only upon the officiating clergy. But men are so easily caught by strictness in trifles, that the fasting system extended, until Anglo-Saxon mothers were prohibited from suckling their infants, or giving them food of any kind, if it could possibly be helped, on the days when they were brought to communicate, until the communion was over.—(Bampt. Lect. 1830, p. 110.) From this prohibition it is observable, that the infants were not brought to mass, in the modern Romish acceptance of that term, that is, to gaze at a dramatised communion without communicants, or more properly to hang in the arms of mothers thus gazing. They came to receive, and that for a whole week together, after baptism. Romanists, in forsaking the religious usages of their forefathers at a communion, being lookers-on instead of communicants, were told at Trent, that they come to be present at a true, proper, and propitiatory sacrifice, beneficial to non-recipients, ane ofletan to husle; se bith tham gedwolan gelic, the an cild fullath tuwa.

Crist sylf gehalgode husel ær his throwunge, he bletsode thone hlaf, and tobræc, thus cwethende to his halgum apostolum, Etath thisne hlaf, hit is min lichama. And he eft bletsode ænne calic mid wine, and cwæth heom thus to, Drincath ealle of thisum, hit is min agen blod thære nivan gecythnysse, the byth for manegum agoten on synna forgyfensse. Se Drihten, the halgode husel ær his throwunge, and cwæth, thæt se hlaf wære his agen lichama, and thæt win wære witodlice his blod, se halgath dæghwamlice, thurh his sacerda handa, hlaf to his lichaman, and win to his blode, on gastlicere geryne, swa swa we rædath on bocum.

Ne bith se liflica hlaf lichamlice swa theah se ylca lichama the Crist on throwode, ne thæt halige win nis thæs Hælendes blod the for us agoten wæs on lichamlican thinge. Ac on gastlican andgyte, ægther bith sothlice se hlaf his lichama, and thæt win eac his blod; swa swa se heofonlica hlaf, the we hatath manna, the feowertig geara afedde Godes folc, and thæt hluttre wæter wæs witodlice his blod, the arn of tham stane on tham wæstene tha. Swa swa Paulus awrat on summon his pistole, Oms patres nostri eandem escam spiritualem manducaverunt, et oms eundem potum spiritualem biberunt: et cetera: Ealle ure fæderas æton, on tham westene, thone ylcan gastlican mete, and thone gastlican drenc druncon. Hi druncon of gastlican stane, and se stan wæs Crist. Se apostol sæde, swa swa ge nu gehyrdon, thæt hi ealle æton thone ylcan gastlican mete, and hi ealle druncon thone gastlican drenc. Ne quæth he na lichamlice ac gastlice. Næs Crist tha gyt geboren, ne his blod næs agoten, tha thæt Israhela folc geæt thone mete, and of tham stane dranc; and se stan næs lichamlice Crist, theah he swa cwæde; hit wæron tha ylcan gerynu on thære ealdan æ and hi gastlice getacnodon thæt gastlice husel uræs Hælendes lichaman, the we halgiath nu<sup>3</sup>.

but antiquity would lead them to suspect, that the sacrifice, which Fathers talk of, may mean their own offerings consecrated for their own receiving.

<sup>1</sup> Foxe and L'Isle say "one host to housel." But this does not appear very intelligible. The term housel, indeed, commonly used in translating Saxon, is so completely obsolete, that it would be, perhaps, better discarded from books. Hence eucharist has latterly been substituted for it in this work. Its origin is evidently the Gothic huns, a word which occurs three times in the extant portions of Ulphilas's version of the New Testament. In St. Matt. ix. 13, it stands for sacrifice, in the authorised English version; onsægdnes, in the Anglo-Saxon; sacrificium, in the Vulgate; and θυσία, in the original. In St. Mark, ix. 49, it stands for offering in the Anglo-Saxon, and victima oflet for the eucharist<sup>1</sup>, is like the heretics, who twice baptise one child.

Christ himself hallowed the eucharist before his passion: he blessed the bread and broke it, thus saying to his holy Apostles, Eat this bread; it is my body. And he afterwards blessed a cup with wine, and saith thus to them, Drink all of this; it is my own blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the forgiveness of sins. The Lord, who hallowed the eucharist before his passion, and saith, that the bread was his own body, and the wine was truly his blood, he halloweth daily through his priests' hands, bread for his body, and wine for his blood, in spiritual mystery, even as we read in books.

The lively bread is not, however, bodily, the same body that Christ suffered in, nor is the holy wine the Saviour's blood that for us was shed in corporeal reality. But in spiritual meaning, both the bread is truly his body, and the wine also is his blood; even as the heavenly bread which we call manna, which forty years fed God's folk, and the clear water that ran from the rock in the wilderness was truly his blood. Paulus, accordingly, wrote in one of his epistles, Oms patres nostri eandem escam spiritualem manducaverunt, et oms eundem potum spiritualem biberunt: et cetera: All our fathers ate, in the wilderness, the same spiritual meat, and drank the spiritual drink. They drank of the spiritual rock, and that rock was Christ. The apostle said, even as ye now heard, that they all ate the same spiritual meat, and they all drank the spiritual drink. He does not, however, say bodily, but spiritually. Then Christ was not as yet born, nor was his blood shed, when the people of Israel ate the meat, and drank of the rock; and the rock was not Christ bodily, though he said so: these were merely the sacraments under the old law, and they spiritually betokened the spiritual eucharist of our Saviour's body which we hallow now.

---

in the Vulgate: the original and English terms are the same as in the former case. In St. John, xvi. 2, it stands for service in the English, obsequium, in the Vulgate, and λαρπειαν, in the original. The Anglo-Saxon renders the two words doeth service, by thenige. In all these cases, therefore, except the last, huns denotes the surrender of a material object for religious uses, and it is plain that such a principle generally entered into Anglo-Saxon ideas of sacrifice. Hence even infants could not be admitted to that eucharistic and commemorative repast, which was deemed indispensable for their spiritual nurture, until their parents had offered for them.

<sup>2</sup> At this point ends the extract printed by Foxe and L'Isle. It begins with the censure upon the superstition of those priests who fill their houses or

Sume preostas nellath syllan tham folce husel buton hy hit gebicgon, ne heora bearn fullian; ac hi sceolon understandan hu se Hælend adræfde mid geworhtne swipe tha cypan of tham temple: nolde thæt hi mangodon on tham mæran huse; and hu he eac bebead on his halgan godspelle, Gratis accepistis, gratis date. Ge hit underfengon butan gearnungum, doth hit eac othrum butan gearnungum. Gif ge, tha halgan thenunga the we tham Hælende doth, syllath with feo, hwæt sylth he us thonne thara laca we moton be Godes leafe brucan the man sylf-willes deth, ac we hit sceolon gearnian?

Man ne mot logian andluman innan cyrcan, ne corn, ne nan thing on Cristes huse, butan tham anum thingum the to his thenungum gebyriath.

Sume preostas mengath win to tham font-wætere, swithe unrihtlice, ongean tha gesetnyssse, swa swa he cwyrth to Gode on thære font-bletsunge, Tu has simplices aquas tuo ore benedicito: Thæt is on Engliscum gereorde, Bleta thu, Drihten, thas anfealdan wæteru mid thinum halgan muthe. Ac thæt wæter ne bith na anfeald gif thær bith win to-gedon, and Crist ne het na fullian his folc mid wine, ac mid anfealdum wætere, swa swa us gewissath thæt Godspell.

Ge sceolon cunnan gemyndlice, and mannum eac secgan tha tyn alican word the God tahte Moysen, and mid his fingre awrat on twam stænenum tabulum, on tham munte Sinai, eallum mannum to steore, ge tham ealdum folce tha, ge us the nu syndon. Hoc Decalogum Moysi: Thæs synd tha tyn beboda, the eac God sylf clypode of tham ylcan munte mid micelre stemne to eallum tham mannum the mid Moyse wæron on tham wæstene tha. Ego sum Dns Ds tuus, qui eduxi te de tra Ægypti: non habebis deos alienos coram me. Thæt is on Englise, Ic eom Drihten thin God, Ic the alædde of Egypta lande, ne hafa eucharist box at Easter for a whole year's use among the sick. Much of it is to be found in the epistle to Wulfstane, or Elfric's Canons; many things also are in the famous Paschal homily, (styled in two MSS. in the Public Library at Cambridge, Sermo de Sacrificio in Die Paschæ.) but upon the whole, the doctrine is brought out more forcibly in this epistle to Wulfstan, than in either of the other pieces.

This may appear an additional reason for believing that the epistle to Wulfstan has been rightly considered as posterior to the other two pieces. That it is by the same author, and not by Elfric Bata, or some other writer, may fairly be presumed from the identity of doctrine, and even of language, running through all the three. The important passage from 1 Cor. x. which explains the Christian sacra-

Some priests will not give the eucharist to the people unless they buy it, nor baptise their children; but they should understand, how the Saviour drove with a scourge that he had made, the dealers out of the temple: he would not have them trade in the great house: and how also, he bade in his holy Gospel, Gratis accepistis, gratis date: You received it without compensation, bestow it in like manner upon others without compensation. If ye give for money the holy ministrations which we do to the Saviour, shall we not forfeit our right to those presents, which, by God's leave, we might enjoy, being voluntarily given, and fairly earned?

People must not lodge goods in a church, or corn, or any thing, in Christ's house, except the things alone that appertain to his ministrations.

Some priests mingle wine with the font-water, very improperly, contrary to the institution: thus one saith to God in the font-blessing, Tu has simplices aquas tuo ore benedicto: That is in English language, Bless thou, Lord, these simple waters with thy holy mouth. But the water is not simple if there be wine added to it, and Christ did not command to baptise his people with wine, but with simple water, even as the Gospel informs us.

Ye should know by heart, and also explain to the people the ten commandments of the law, which God taught Moses, and wrote with his finger on two tables of stone, on the mount Sinai, for the direction of all men, as well for the old people then, as for us who are now. Hoc Decalogum Moysi: These are the ten commandments, which even God himself proclaimed from the same mount with a great voice to all the people who were then with Moses in the wilderness. Ego sum Dns Ds tuus, qui eduxi te de tra Ægypti: non habebis deos alienos coram me. That is in English, I am the Lord, thy God, I led thee

---

ments by God's dealings with the Israelites in the wilderness, is evidently taken from Bertram, or more properly Ratramn, but Elfric has pushed it more completely home. He has used it in the eucharistic Paschal homily, but not in the epistle to Wulf-sine. This is, indeed, by far the least considerable of the three famous Anglo-Saxon testimonies against transubstantiation. The whole three, with their precursor, Ratramn's tract, seem like a mass of circumstantial evidence as to a progress in the belief in the corporal presence. The continental piece, though clear enough to the point, is the most guarded of the four, and the epistle to Wulfstan, the least so. This would be the natural course of events, if, in spite of scholarly efforts to stop it, superstition was continually at work upon the ancient eucharistic faith.

thu ælfremde godas ætforan me nateshwon. Thæt is thæt forme bebod, thæt we symle wurthion Ælmihtigan God; se the ana is God, seo halge Thrynnys the ealle thing gescop, on anre godcundnysse æfre rixiende; and we ne sceolon na wurthian tha dwollican godas, hi ne synd godas, ac gramlice deofu.

Thæt other bebod is thus, Non adsumes nom Dni Dei tui in vanum: Ne underfok thu on idel thines Drihtnes naman. Se underfeth on idel his Drihtnes naman se the gelyfth swa on Crist thæt he sy gesceapen, and nele gelyfan thæt he æfre God wære mid his Ælmihtigan Fæder on anre godcundnysse, and mid tham Halgan Gaste on anum mægenthrymne. He nis na gesceaft, ac is soth scyppend, and ælc sceaft is sothlice undertheod nu idelnysse, thæt is, awendedlicnysse, forthan the tha gesceaftu beoth to beteran thingum awende.

Thæt thridde bebod is, Memento ut diem sabbati scifices. Thæt is on urum gereordum, Beo thu gemyndig thæt thu gehalgie thone halgan resten-dæg. Under Moyses æ, men halgodon tha thone Sæternes-dæg mid swithlicum wurthmynte fram theowtlicum weorcum; and we sceolon us healdan fram theowtlicum weorcum, thæt syndon synna gewiss, the gebringath on theowytte, tha the hi swithorst begath: swa swa se Hælend cwæth on his halgan Godspelle, Oms qui facit peccatum servus peccati: Ælc thara the synne gewyrcth is there synne theow. We sceolon gastlice healdan Godes resten-dæg, swa thæt we sylfe beon fram synnum æmtige, and se dæg beo gehalgod on us sylfum swa. Fela thinga getacnath se fore-sæde ræsten-dæg, ac we healdath nu, æfter thæs Hælendes æriste, thone Sunnan-dæge freolsne; forthan the he of deathe aras on tham Easterlican Sunnan-dæge, and se Sunnan-dæg is on gesceapnysse fyrmest, and we sceolon eac hine æfre wurthian, Gode to wurthmynte, on gastlicum theowdome.

Thas threo bebodu wæron on anre tabulan awritene, and tha othre seofan on othre tabulan.

Thæt feorthe bebod is, Honora patrem tuum, et matrem tuam. Thæt is on Engliscere spræce, Arwurtha thinne fæder, and eac thine moder. Se the wyrige fæder oththe moder, se is deathes

---

<sup>1</sup> A reader happily brought up among Protestants may feel surprised at such a second commandment, and look through the series to see if he can find the prohibition of graven images any where else. His eye would be more likely thus to wander if he had ever heard Romanists say that they no more take liberties with the Decalogue, than Protestants, only from the land of Egypt: have thou not strange gods before me on any account. This is the first commandment, that we constantly honour Almighty God, who alone is God, the holy Trinity, that created all things, ever reigning in one divinity: and we should not any way honour the false gods, which are not gods, but raging devils.

The second commandment is thus, Non adsumes nom Dni Dei tui in vanum: Take thou not in vain thy Lord's name<sup>1</sup>. He takes in vain his Lord's name who so believes in Christ as if he were created, and will not believe that was ever God with his Almighty Father in one divinity, and with the Holy Ghost in one majesty. He is not a creature, but is the true creator, and every creature is indeed subject now to vanity, that is, mutability, for the creatures will be changed to better things.

The third commandment is, Memento ut diem sabbati scifices. That is in our language, Be thou mindful that thou hallow the holy resting-day. Under the law of Moses, men then hallowed the Saturn's-day with especial honour from servile works; and we should keep ourselves from servile works, which are motions of sin, which bring into servitude those who much give way to them, even as the Saviour saith in his holy Gospel, Om̄s qui facit peccatum servus peccati: Every one of those who commit sin is the servant of sin. We should spiritually keep God's resting-day, so that we ourselves be free from sins, and the day thus be hallowed in ourselves. Many things mark the aforesaid resting-day, but we keep now, since the Saviour's resurrection, the Sunday as a festival; because he arose from death on Easter Sunday, and the Sunday is foremost in creation, and we should ever honour it, in honour of God, in spiritual servitude.

These three commandments were written on one table, and the other seven on another table.

The fourth commandment is, Honora patrem tuum, et matrem tuam. That is in English speech, Honour thy father and also thy mother. He who curses father or mother is one guilty follow some ancient authorities in arranging it differently. Here is, however, not arrangement, but exclusion, and more cases of the same kind may be seen in the Author's Bampton Lectures, p. 242. The practice is not extinct, and is not likely to be until Rome rejects the second Council of Nice. People cannot both adhere to that assembly, and face the second commandment.

---

scyldig. Æfter gastlicum andgite, God is ure fæder, and his halige gelathung, thæt is, geleafful folc, is ure gastlice modor, on thære we beoth acennede on tham halgan fullukte Gode to bearnum; and we forþi sceolon God urne fæder, and his gastlican bryde, tha halgan cyrcan symle wurthian.

Thæt fifte bebod is, Non occides: Ne ofsleh thu nan man. That is seo mæste syn that man man ofsleah unscyldigne, oththe he his sawle ofslea gyf hi hine to synne tiht; and yfel bith tham menn the mæg gehelpan tham wædligan menn, and forwyrnth him his goda, and læt hine acwelan for his uncyste.

Thæt sixte bebod is, Non mechaberis: Ne unriht hæm thu. Ælc thæra manna the butan rihtre æwe hæmth, he hæmth unrihtlice.

Thæt seofthe bebod is, Non furtum facies; thæt is, Ne stala thu; forþam se the stylth, he hæfth wulfes wican, and na wises mannes; and se rica the berypth, and mid nednysse ofsitt tha unscyldigan menn, he is sothlice wyrsa thonne se digela theof, forþan the he deth openlice thæt se other deth dearnunga symle.

Thæt eahtothe bebod is, Non loqueris contra proximum tuum falsum testimonium: Ne beoth thu leas-gewita. Hit it is sothlice awriten, Ne bith se leasa gewita ungewitnod nates-hwon; and se the spreth leasunga he sceal losian sylf. Wa tham the for sceattum forsylth hine sylfne, and arent soth to leasum, and leas to sothum.

Thæt nigothe bebod is, Non concupisces uxorem proximi tui: Ne gewilna thu othres mannes wifes.

Thæt teothe bebod is, Non concupisces ullam rem proximi tui: Ne gewilna thu othres mannes æhta. Hit bith riht thæt gehwa hæbbe thæt he sylf begyt, buton he geunne othrum mannum sylfwilles; and gehwa ofgange, æfter Godes rihte, othres mannes thing, oththe he hit forgange.

Nu ge habbath gehyred be tham healicum tyn bebodum: nu wille we eow secgan scortlice eac swilce be tham eahta heafod

---

<sup>1</sup> Alluding probably to Ps. v. 6, where speak leasing, that is, falsehood, is still the version of our Prayer Book. | Sprecaþ leasunga is the Anglo-Saxon version there.

of death. After spiritual meaning, God is our father, and his holy congregation, that is, believing people, is our spiritual mother, in whom we are born by holy baptism as God's children; and we therefore should ever honour God, our father, and his spiritual bride, the holy church.

The fifth commandment is, Non occides: Slay thou not any man. It is a very great sin when one man slays another who is innocent, or slays his soul by enticing it into sin; and evil will it be to those people who can help the needy, but deny them any of their goods, and let them perish from their own covetousness.

The sixth commandment is, Non mechaberis: Make thou no unrighteous connection. Every one of those men who has intercourse with any other than a lawful wife, makes an unrighteous connection.

The seventh commandment is, Non furtum facies; that is, Steal not thou; for he that steals has the ways of a wolf, and not of a wise man; the rich man too who plunders, and reduces the unoffending people to distress, he is really worse than the secret thief, for he does openly what the other never does without concealment.

The eighth commandment is, Non loqueris contra proximum tuum falsum testimonium: Be thou not a false witness. It is truly written, The false witness shall by no means be unpunished, and he who speaks leasing<sup>1</sup> shall destroy himself. Woe to them who for money sell themselves, turning truth to lies, and lies to truth.

The ninth commandment is, Non concupisces uxorem proximi tui: Covet thou not another man's wife.

The tenth commandment is, Non concupisces ullam rem proximi tui: Covet thou not another man's property. It is right that every man have whatever he himself got, unless he bestows it on other people of his own will; and let every one keep off, according to God's law, from that which belongs to another until he forgoes it.

Now ye have heard about the ten chief commandments; we will, therefore, tell you in the same short way about the eight<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Aquinas makes the capital vices to be seven, namely, Inanis Gloria, Invidia, Ira, Avaritia, Tristitia, Gula, Luxuria. Prima Secundæ. Col. Agr. 1622, p. 147.

leahtrum the tham unwaran men fordoth, and witodlice besencath on tha ecan witu.

Se forma heafod leahter is on Leden, Superbia, and on Englisc, Modignyss. Seo gemacode to deofsum tha wlitegan englas the wunedon on heofonum; and se modiga mann ne mæg cuman on heofonum, ac bith thara deofla gefera, buton he thæs dysiges geswice, forthan the modignyss is swithe mycel dysig, and se wisa man nat on hwam he modige. Seo modignyss bith ælces yfeles ord and ende, ac heo bith oferswithed thurh tha sothan eadmodnysse. Seo eadmodnysss gedeth thæt tha eadmodan beoth englum gelice on tham ecan life.

Se other heafod leahter is Gastrimargia, vel Gula, thæt is, on Englisc, Gyfernyss. Se awearp æt frumam tha frum-secapenan men of neorwan-wange, tha tha hi æton of tham forbodenan treowe; and se man bith gifre, the for gifernisse ne mæg his mæles onbidan, swa swa man don sceal, and se the druncennysse to dysiglice begæth, and on oferflowednysse gefudath his lif. Thone untheaw oferswyth seo gesceadwise gemetegung thæt he hæbbe gemet on metum and on drencum.

Se thridda heafod leahter is Fornicatio, thæt is, seo Galnyss, tha oferswyth seo clænnys.

Se feortha heafod leahter is Avaritia, on Leden, and on Englisc, Gitsung. Seo ontent thone man to maran æhte æfre, and heo næfre ne bith full. Se bith oferswithed thurh cystignysse swa theah.

Se fifta is Ira, thæt is, Weamodnys, thæt se man ne mæge his mod gewildan, ac buton ælcum wisdome wodlice yrsath, and manslihtas gefremmath, and fela nednyssa. Thone mæg oferswithan thæs modes gewild, se the mid gesceade him sylfon gewissath.

Se sixta is Accidia, thæt is, Asolcennys, thæt is modes sarnys, and ungemetod slapolnys, thæt se man beo ungearo to ælcum gode æfre. Thes leahter gemacath mycel yfel tham menn, thonne he

---

<sup>1</sup> More properly, and not unusually, written Acedia, its etymology being ἀκηδία. The French sometimes well translate the word by ennui. It was the great infirmity, or vice, as ascetic spirits considered it, of a monk's or hermit's life. Men urged upon such a course by some temporary impulse, often broke completely down under its wearisome monotony, and utter hopelessness of any earthly change. They lost all relish for the endless calls of a formal piety, and even loathed every return of them, yet neither public opinion, nor their own sense of duty allowed any escape. Before the civil power, however, lent stringency to monastic vows, an intoler-capital vices which undo unwary people, and indeed sink them in everlasting punishments.

The first capital vice is in Latin, Superbia, and in English, Pride. This made into devils the beautiful angels who lived in the heavens; and the proud man cannot get to heaven, but will be a companion of the devils, unless he leaves his folly off, for pride is a very great folly, and a wise man does not know what he has to be proud of. Pride is the beginning and end of every evil, but it is overcome by means of true humility. From humility it comes to pass that the lowly-minded will be like angels in the everlasting life.

The second capital vice is Gastrimargia, vel Gula, that is, in English, Greediness. This cast out at the beginning the first-created human beings from paradise, when they ate of the forbidden tree; and the man is greedy, whose impatience knows not how to wait for a meal, as one ought to do; he too, who like a fool, is given up to drunkenness, and lets excess direct his life. This vice is overcome by that rational temperance which sets one a bound in meats, and in drinks.

The third capital vice is Fornicatio, that is, Lasciviousness, which purity overcomes.

The fourth capital vice is Avaritia, in Latin, and in English, Covetousness. This constantly kindles in men the desire of more property, and it is never satisfied. It is overcome by means of liberality notwithstanding.

The fifth is Ira, that is, Waywardness, which makes a man unable to govern his own mind, and madly to grow angry without any reason; from this come manslaughters and many violent acts. It may be overcome by that mastery over the mind, which enables a man to guide himself with discretion.

The sixth is Accidia<sup>1</sup>, that is, Listlessness, or a depression of spirits and immoderate sluggishness, which make man never ready for any good. This vice causes much evil to men, since able feeling of irksomeness did really sometimes make men retract a hasty farewell to social habits. This appears from the following passage in Alcuin De Virtutibus et Vitiis. "Acedia est pestis, quæ Deo famulantibus multum nocere probatur, dum otiosus homo torpescit in desideriis carnalibus, nec in opere gaudet spirituali, nec in salute animæ suæ lætatur, nec in adjutorio fraterni laboris hilarescit: sed tantum concupiscit et desiderat, et otiosa mens per omnia discurret. Hæc et quæ maxime monachos excutit de cella in seculum, et de regulari conversatione ejicit eos in abrupta vitiorum."— Opp. ii. 143.

---

thurh asolcennysse swa aswunden leofath thæt he nan thing to gode ne deth on his life, and nan edlean næfth butan ece wite. Se leahter bith oferswithed thurh thæs modes anrædnysse, thæt se man beo anræde æfre on godum weorcum.

Se seofotha heafod leahter is Tristitia, on Leden, thæt is, on Englisc, Unrotnyss, for mislicum gelimpum the mannum becymth on cwealme, and on lyrum, oththe on freonda forthsithe, thonne murcnath se mann on his mode to swithe, and ceorath ongean God ungesceadwislice. Twa unrotnysse syndon, swa swa us secgath bec, an is theos yfele, the we embe sprecath, other is halwende, swa swa we her secgath, thæt se man unrotsige for his ærrum synnum, and hi behreowsige mid rædfestum mode. Seo yfele unrotnyss bith eac oferswythed thurh tha gastlican blisse the man for gode habban sceal.

Se eahtotha heafod leahter is Cenodoxia, id est, Jactantia, vel Vana Gloria, thæt is Gylp, on Englisc, oththe Getot-gereht; thæt se man beo lof-georn, and mid gylpe afylled, theah he nateskwon hergendlic ne sy, and bith thonne hiwere thurh thone heafod leahter, and ranc on his gylpum, and unrædfest on dædum. Thone leahter oferswith seo sothe lufu on Gode on urum heortum agoten thurh thone Halgan Gast.

Nu ge habbath gekyred tha eahta heafod leahtras, and eac tha eahta mihta the hi magon oferswithan. Warniath eow with tha leahtras, and leorniath tha mihta, thæt ge magon oferswithan tha onsigendan deor, and heora tothum æberstan; fortham the nan thing bith swa yfel on thisum life thæt læcedom næbbe thurh thæs Hælandes foresceawunge, the hylt ealle thing, gif we læcedomas us sylfum don cunnan.

Debetis in Purificatione Sce Marie Candelas benedicere.

Ge sceolon, on tham mæsse-dæg, the is gehaten Purificatio

<sup>1</sup> Durand says, no doubt truly enough, that these candle ceremonies arose from an adaptation of similar Pagan formalities which ushered in February. He attributes the credit, if it be any, of thus continuing a heathen superstition under a new name, to Pope Sergius, ut ritum Gentilium in melius commutet religio Xpiana. Tapers might be offered upon this occasion, because they were used in celebrating the Lord's Supper, or at mass, as the phrase ran, even in the day-time eventually. Upon the same principle, oil and incense were allowed among eucharistic oblations, so early as the time when the canons that go under the name of the Apostles were compiled.—(Canon 3.) They do not, however, appear to have been considered as real offerings, that is, sacrifices. The permission to receive them is given by προσάγεσθαι, indolence may take such a hold upon them, as to keep them from doing any good while they live, and from having any reward but eternal punishment. The vice is overcome by that steadiness of mind which makes man always ready for good works.

The seventh capital vice is Tristitia, in Latin, that is, in English, Sadness, for various accidents that come to men, in sickness, and in losses, or in the death of friends, when a man grieves in his mind to excess, and unwisely murmurs against God. There are two sadnesses, as books tell us, one is the bad kind that we are speaking about, the other is salutary, which we have now to mention, making a man sorry for his former sins, and bent upon repenting of them. The bad sadness is overcome by that happy frame of mind which goodness is certain to bestow on man.

The eighth capital vice is Cenodoxia, id est, Jactantia, vel Vana Gloria, that is, Vanity, in English, or Pomposity; which makes a man vain-glorious, and filled with conceit, though there may be nothing in him to praise; he is therefore a pretender, whom a capital vice, urges upon offensive boasts, and unsteady deeds. This vice is overcome by the true love of God shed in our hearts through the Holy Ghost.

Now ye have heard the eight capital vices, and also the eight mights that can overcome them. Be upon your guard against the vices, and learn the mights, that ye may be able to overcome the beasts that lie wait, and escape their teeth; since nothing is so bad in this life as to have no cure provided for it by the Saviour, who will take care of all things, if we ourselves know how to make use of his medicines.

Debetis in Purificatione Sc̄e Marie Candelas benedicere<sup>1</sup>.

Ye should, both clerical and lay, on the mass-day, which is now commonly translated by offerre, but formerly, it seems from Suicer, (in voc. προσάγω.) by admovere, which he thinks the less correct of the two. Perhaps he is wrong: προσενέγκη is used in the canon, for speaking of the bread and wine, and probably, because the real offerings, and things merely subsidiary to their administration, were designedly placed upon different footings. The use of lights when the sun was up, a practice learnt from Pagans, is forbidden by the 37th canon of the Council of Elvira, a difficulty which Durant (De Ritt. 58,) meets by observing that the council was provincial. This reason also serves to invalidate its testimony in the 36th canon against images.—LABB. et Coss. i. 26, 974.

See Marie, bletsian candela, and beran mid lofsange, gehadode, gelæwede, to processionem, and offrian hi swa byrnende, æfter tham Godspelle, tham mæsse preoste, mid tham offrung-sange.

Ge sceolon bletsian axan, on Caput Jeunii, and mid halige wætere sprengan do thonne se mæsse-preost on upweardum his hæfde mid thære halgan rode-tacne, and on ealra manna the æt thære mæssan beoth, ær tham the he mæssige and ga to processionem.

Ge sceolon, on Palm-Sunnan-dæge, palm twigu bletsian, and veran mid lofsange to processionem, and habban on handa, gehadode, gelæwede, and offrian hig syththan æfter tham Godspelle tham mæsse preost mid tham offrung sange. Nu gyf hwa nyte hwæt this getacnige, he leornige æt othrum menn on Leden, oththe on Englisc.

Beoth sothfæste, ic bidde, and betweox eow getrywe, beoth eac snotere, and swithe rihtwise. Ne beswice nan othere, ne ge ne swerion man; ne lufige ge higeleaste, ne ge gligmenn ne beon, sprecath butan athe mid anfealdne bylewitnesse, swa swa se Hælend tæhte on his halgan Godspelle. Lufiath eow betwynan, and gyf hwa lare ne cunne, he leornige æt othrum the læredra sy, and se mid eadmodnysse hine gewissige. Thæt we willath eac don, gyf us hwa ahsath, swa swa us manath Moyses gesetnyss, Interroga patrem tuum, et annuntiabit tibi; et cetera. Ahsa thine fæder, and he cyththe embe God: ahsa thine yldran, hi the andwerdath and secgath.

Uton, beon gemyndige hu se mildheorta Crist cwæth, Lufa thine Drihten God mid ealre thinre heortan, and lufa thine <sup>1</sup> The offering-song, as this portion of the old service was called in Anglo-Saxon times, is of great, but unknown antiquity. Undoubtedly, however, it has not the stamp of the primitive ages. Walafrid Strabo, accordingly, expresses a belief that the holy fathers offered in silence, and remarks the existing trace of this in the silent offerings made on Saturday in Passion-week, or the Holy Sabbath.—DALLÆUS. De Cultt. 1208.

<sup>2</sup> Ash-Wednesday.

<sup>3</sup> It appears from the pseudo-Alcuin, (Opp. ii. 475,) that the priest's assistants (ministri) held palms in their hands until the end of the service. These twigs might be, therefore, considered as needed for the communion-service, or mass, of the day, and hence received upon that occasion, as offerings. This principle may serve to explain the reception of milk and honey as offerings, on the Saturday in Passion week, a practice sanctioned by the African Church so early as 397. This was the time for baptising, and an ancient custom prescribed the giving of milk and honey, as the first food to be tasted after baptism, being emblems of the simple and sweet innocency of childhood. The African Church did called Purificatione S̄cæ Mariæ, bless candles, and bear them to procession with hymns, and offer them thus burning, after the Gospel, to the mass-priest, while the offertory is being sung<sup>1</sup>.

Ye should bless ashes, in Caput Jejuniæ<sup>2</sup>, and with holy water sprinkle them, when the mass-priest raises his head with the holy sign of the cross, and scatter them on all the people that shall be at the mass, before he masses and goes to procession.

Ye should, on Palm-Sunday, bless palm twigs, and bear them with hymns to procession, and have them in your hands, clergy and laity, and offer them afterwards at the end of the Gospel, to the mass-priest, while the offertory is being sung<sup>3</sup>. Now if any one know not what this betokens, let him learn of other men in Latin, or in English.

Stick to the truth, I beseech, and be faithful among yourselves, be also prudent, and strictly just. Let no one deceive another, or forswear himself; love not carelessness, and be not gleemen; speak without an oath with single-minded sincerity, even as the Saviour taught in his holy Gospel. Love one another, and if any one know not learning, let him learn of some one else, who may be better instructed, and let that other with humility give him information. This we are also willing to do, if any one ask us, agreeably to the admonition given by Moses, Interroga patrem tuum, et annuntiabit tibi; et cetera. Ask thy father, and he will inform thee about God: ask thy elders, and they will answer and tell thee.

Come, let us be mindful how the kind-hearted Christ saith, Love thy Lord God with all thine heart, and love thy neighbour not, however, allow these offerings to be confounded with such as were properly eucharistic, but commanded them to have a benediction of their own. Their admission at all among the sacramental oblations of the day may be accounted for by the usage of administering the communion immediately afterwards to the newly-baptised infants, so that the two sacraments, and often confirmation besides, really were different members of one continuous ceremony. Upon the same principle may be explained the offering of oil for episcopal consecration, on Maundy Thursday. Some of it was to form the oil of catechumens, used before baptism, some again, chrism, used after baptism. Even that for the sick was likely to be used at the same time with domestic administrations of the eucharist. The African Church also allowed offerings of first fruits, but only of corn and grapes, the raw materials of the eucharistic feast, so strictly was every thing made to harmonise with it, when the Lord's Supper was administered.—LABB. et COSS. ii. 1068. BONA. 389. DALLÆUS. 290.

nehstan swa swa thesylfne. Thas twa bebodu belucath ealle tha halgan lare; fortham se the God lufath, he gelyfth eac on hine, and nele nan thing don thæs the God oflicige, ac swa swa he fyrrest mæg, he gefylth his bebodu. And se the his nehstan lufath, nele he him nan lath don, ne his æhta him ætbrædan dearnunga oththe eawunga.

Gefultumige us se Hælend to his halgum bebodum. Se the leofath mid his leofan Fæder, and tham Halgan Gaste, on anre godcundnisse, hi thry an God æfre rixiende. Amen.

---

even as thyself. These two commandments comprise all the holy lore; for he that loves God believes also in him, and will do nothing that God dislikes, but to the very utmost that he can fulfil his commandments. And he who loves his neighbour, will not do him any harm, or deprive him of his property secretly or openly.

May the Saviour aid us for his holy commandments. He that liveth with his beloveth Father, and the Holy Ghost, in one divinity, the three one God ever reigning. Amen.

---

III.

SERMO DE CENA DOMINI<sup>1</sup>.

LEOFAN men, ic wille cythan eow eallum, and tham huru the hit ær nystan, hwanon seo bysn ærest aras, thæt biseopas ascadath ut of cyrican, on foreweardan Lenctene, tha men the mid openan heafod gyltan hi sylfe forgyltath, and eft hy, æfter geornfulne deadbote, into lædeth, on tham dæge the bith Cena Dni: eal swa to-dæge is.

Ure Drihten gescop and geworht Adam, thone forman man, haligne, and clæne, and synleasne, himsylfum to gelicnesse, and tha sylfan gelicnesse ure Drihten eac lærde and fæste bebead, thæt we georne on us sylfum habban and healdan sculon. He cwæth, Estote scī, quia et ego scs sum. We rædath on bocum, thæt for Adames godnesse, and for his halignesse, God hine gelogode on fruman in paradiso, on ealre myrhthe, and on ealra mærthe. Thær he geseah Godes englas, and with spræc, and with God sylfne he spræc, and næfre he ne swulte, ne death ne tholode, ne sar ne sorgo næfre ne gebide, nære thæt he syngode. Ac sona swa he syngode, and thurh deofles lare breac forbodenan, sona God sylfa, he is ealra biseopa biseop, anydde ut thone Adam of thære myrhthe the he ær wæs, and he syththan leofode her on worulde sarig and sorhful tha hwile he leofode, and æfter tham ferde to helle, and thær tha syththan lange wunode on yrmthe, oth thæt Crist hine thanon, thurh his mildheortnyse, of yrmthum brohte, and hine into thære heofonlican cyrican syththan gelædde, the he asyththan inne on wunode, mid Godes englum, and mid his halgum, on ecan wuldre.

Biseopas syndon to tham gesette on thisne worulde, thæt hy georne sculon, be Cristes bysene, and be his lare, Godes folc thenian to tham the heom thearf sy, and æfter thære bysene the God sylf on Adame astealde, the he hine, for his halignesse, and for his godnesse, on fruman in paradiso gelogode. Æfter thære bysene we lathiath and logiath Cristene men into Godes

<sup>1</sup> Bibl. Bodl. MSS. Junii. 99. f. 31.

<sup>2</sup> The various formalities used in the Anglo-Saxon church, on this day, are advantageously brought under view in a Pontifical, beautifully written, but unfortunately imperfect, preserved among the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum. (Tiberius, C. 1.) An extract from it, detailing the Cæna

III.

SERMON FOR THE LORD'S SUPPER-DAY<sup>s</sup>.

BELOVED men, I will tell you all, and those especially who knew it not before, whence the example first was taken, that bishops exclude from church, at the beginning of Lent, the people who with open capital vices, render themselves guilty; and again, after earnest penance, lead them into it, on the day which is Cena Dñi, which is the present day.

Our Lord created and made Adam, the first man, holy, and pure, and sinless, in his own likeness, and the same likeness our Lord also taught and firmly bade, that we should earnestly have and hold in ourselves. He saith, Estote sc̄i, quia et ego sc̄s sum. We read in books, that for Adam's goodness, and for his holiness, God lodged him at first in paradiso, in all joy, and in all glory. There he saw and spoke with God's angels, and with God himself he spoke, and never could he perish, or suffer death, or expect sore or sorrow, until he sinned. But no sooner did he sin, and through the devil's teaching, break the prohibitions, than God himself, (he is bishop of all bishops,) drove Adam out of the joy in which he was before, and he lived afterwards here in the world sore and sorrowful so long as he lived, and after that went to hell, and there long dwelt in misery, until Christ, through his mercy, brought him thence from miseries, and afterwards led him into the heavenly church, in which he has dwelt ever since, with God's angels, and with his saints, in everlasting glory.

Bishops are for this appointed in the world, that they should earnestly, by Christ's example, and by his lore, train God's folk to that which may be needful for them, and after the example which God himself set in Adam, whom he for his holiness, and for his goodness, at first lodged in paradiso. After this example we invite Christian men into God's house, and lodge

---

Domini ceremonies, may be seen in the Author's Bampton Lectures for 1830, p. 110. The MS. is thought to have been chiefly written before the Norman Conquest. The particular piece in it from which the extract was made, is entitled Sermo Generalis de Confectione Crismatis in Cœna Domini habitus.

huse, and we lætath thæt ælc gefullod sy, æfter his fullukte, halig, and thurk thæs halgan fulluktes halignesse wæs wel wyrthe thæt he on cyrican oft syththan gewunige, and Godes lare and lage gelome gekyre. And we lærath thæt gehwa eac tha swythe fæste and rihtlice healde, and hi swithe georne smeage gelome. And gif hwilc man thonne Godes lage swa swithe abrece thæt he hine sylfne openlice with God forwyrce mid healicre misdæde, thonne be thære bysene the God on Adame astealde, tha tha he hine nydde ut of paradiso, be thære bysne we eac nyddath ut tha for syngodon of Godes cyrican, oth thæt hi mid eadmodre deadbote hi sylf geinnan to tham thæt hy thyder in eft lædan durran. Eal swa we to-dæg tha don willath the thas halgan tid geornlice bettan thæt hy ær bræcon.

Understande eac Cristena manna gehwilec thæt thæt forbod husl-ganges, and inganges into cyrican, is eal thearfic tham dædbetan the ariht understandan can: thæt he hine sylfne on his gethance for his misdædan swithe threage, and hine sylfne gecnawe swa forworhtne thæt he thæra thinga wyrthe ne sy the tha men syndon the hy sylfe habbath gehealden mid rihte. And theah swa se man sy swithor forsingod, swa he geornor and gelomor Godes hus sece, dæges and nihtes, and cneowige thærute oft and gelome, and clypige to Criste geomeriendum mode, and talige hine sylfne with God swa forworhtne thæt he wyrthe ne sy thæt he gan mote into Godes huse. And æfre swa he hyne sylfne swythor geeadmet on his dædbote, swa bith his dæbot Gode anfengre, and Godes mildheortnes him miccle the gearwre. And ure ælc mæg be woruldlican thingan eac georne gecnawan thæt gyf hwa hæfth his hlaforde sare abolgen, ne byth him na gebeorhlic thæt he him ætforan ga ær he gebete. Nu huru ne byth na gebeorhlic tham the God hæfth forworht hine sylfne ealle to swythe mid openlice dæde, thæt he to hrædlice into Godes huse æfte tham racige; ac stande thærute, and bete swithe georne swa swa him man tæce, oth thæt he mid hreowsunge, and mid geornfulne bote geinnige him sylfne, swa swa bisceop him tæce, into Godes huse. And thonne mæg se bisceop eac thæs mannes syngrina, thurk Godes thafunge, the swythor gelythian, the thus wile georne, mid eadmodre heortan, helpan him sylfan.

them there, and we consider that every baptised man is, after his baptism, holy, and through the holiness of holy baptism, to be well worthy that he oft afterwards frequent the church, and God's lore and law regularly hear. And we teach besides that every one should hold these very firmly and rightly, and should constantly meditate upon them with great earnestness. But if any one God's law so excessively break that he completely ruins himself with God by the higher misdeeds, then by the example which God set in Adam, when he drove him out of paradiso, by that example, we also drive out sinners against him from God's church, until they with humble penance themselves allow us to presume upon leading them in thither again. Even so we are willing to do to-day with such as have earnestly done penance in this holy season for that which they broke before.

Let every Christian man also understand that the forbidding of admission to the eucharist, and of entrance into church, is quite necessary for bringing people to a right understanding of penance, leading them to cast within their own minds severe blame upon themselves for their misdeeds, and making them know themselves to be so undone, that they are not worthy of those things which men are who have kept themselves with propriety. And accordingly by how much the worse a man has sinned, by so much the more earnestly and frequently let him seek God's house, day and night, and kneel thereout with little intermission, and call to Christ with mournful mind, and account himself so undone with God, that he is not worthy to go into God's house. And by how much the more severely he humbles himself in his penance, by so much the more acceptable is his penance to God, and God's mercy is much more at hand with him. Now every one of us knows full well in worldly things, that if a person has sorely offended his lord, it is not to be endured that he should go before him until he has given satisfaction. In the same way it is not to be endured that a man who has completely undone himself with God by shameless deeds, should after them rush too hastily into God's house: but let him stand on the outside of it, and do penance very earnestly as he is taught, until with repentance and real satisfaction, according to the bishop's teaching, he has gained an entrance for himself into God's house. The bishop too, with God's permission, may deal more mildly

Eala leofan men, uton don ealle swa swa us thearf is: utan helpe ure sylfna, and utan anmodlice eallum mode gebugan to Criste, and earnian his miltse swa swa we geornost magon. He is swythe milde; and him symle sy lof and wurthmynt æfre to worulde. Amen<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> It might seem from the following penitential prayer, that the Anglo-Saxons thought but little of purgatory when they felt conscious of real repentance. "Deus propitius esto mihi peccatori, et da mihi licentiam in hac vita veram agere pœnitentiam, per quam deleam omnia peccata mea." —(MSS. Cotton. Tiberius, C. 1, f. 84.) It also seems, that the folly of confessing to saints, that is, to dead persons, probably just as much out of hearing as the dead generally are, had not done more than make a stealthy pro-with the offences of a man who is thus willing earnestly, and with a humble heart, to help himself.

Come then, beloved men, let us do whatever our cases may require: come, let us help ourselves, and with one consent altogether turn our minds to Christ, and gain his mercy by every means within our power. He is very mild, and to him ever be praise and honour, world without end. Amen.

---

gress among the Anglo-Saxons; although they thought acts invested with an additional solemnity, if done before the relics of saints. This appears from the following form of confession. "Ego confiteor tibi, Pater cœli et terræ, coram hoc altare tuo sancto, et istius loci reliquiis, et coram sacerdote tuo, omnia peccata mea, et quicquid Dei pietas mihi ad memoriam reducit: de cogitationibus malis, et sermonibus otiosis, sive immundis, et operibus pravis: quæcunque ego feci contra præcepta Dei."—Ibid. C. 6, f. 24.

---

IV.

ANGLO-SAXON ECCLESIASTICAL CHRONOLOGY.

CONVERSIONS.

Kent <sup>1</sup> . . . . .	597
Essex, temporarily . . . . .	604
——— finally . . . . .	653
Northumbria, temporarily . . . . .	627
——— finally . . . . .	635
Lincolnshire <sup>2</sup> . . . . .	628
East Anglia . . . . .	631
Wessex <sup>3</sup> . . . . .	635
Mercia <sup>4</sup> . . . . .	653
Sussex <sup>5</sup> . . . . .	681

COUNCILS.

Augustine's Oak <sup>6</sup> . . . . .	603
Second, under Augustine . . . . .	603
Whitby . . . . .	664
Hertford . . . . .	673
Hatfield . . . . .	680
Anonymous, under Ina . . . . .	693
Bapchild . . . . .	694
Berghamsted . . . . .	696
Nidd . . . . .	705
Cloveshoo . . . . .	747
Calcuith . . . . .	787
Celychyth . . . . .	816
Grateley . . . . .	928
London . . . . .	943

Andover . . . . .	961
Wihthordestane . . . . .	962
Anonymous, under Edgar . . . . .	967
Winchester . . . . .	968
Kirtlington . . . . .	977
Calne . . . . .	978
Amesbury . . . . .	978
Eanham . . . . .	1008
Haba . . . . .	1014
Anonymous, under Ethelred <sup>7</sup> . . . . .	1014
Winchester, under Canute . . . . .	1021

PRELATES.

CANTERBURY.

Augustine commissioned . . . . .	596
——— arrives in Kent . . . . .	597
——— visits Gaul . . . . .	597
——— receives the pall . . . . .	601
——— founds Canterbury Ca- thedral . . . . .	602
——— meets the British clergy . . . . .	603
——— consecrates Mellitus and Justus . . . . .	604
——— dies <sup>8</sup> . . . . .	605
Laurence, Archbishop . . . . .	605
——— converts Eadbald . . . . .	616
Mellitus . . . . .	619
Justus . . . . .	624
Honorius . . . . .	631
Deuseddit . . . . .	655
Wighard . . . . .	665
Theodore . . . . .	668
——— arrives, May 27 . . . . .	669
——— re-consecrates Chad, Sept. . . . .	669

<sup>1</sup> Idols were not, however, destroyed in Kent, until 640, when Erconbert, then king, issued orders for that purpose, being the first of English sovereigns who did so.—BED. l. 3. c. 8.

<sup>2</sup> Paulinus was the missionary.—(BED. l. 2. c. 16.) His success was, probably, not more lasting, than on the northern side of the Humber.

<sup>3</sup> "The date is uncertain, being ascribed to A. D. 633, by the Annals of Winchester, to 634, by the Saxon Chronicle, and Florence of Worcester, with whom agree Wharton and Smith, and to 635, by Rudborne."—STEVENSON'S Bede. Lond. 1838, p. 169.

<sup>4</sup> Peada's visit to the Northumbrian court is referred to 653. He is thought to have been baptised at Walbottle, near Newcastle. He returned into his own dominions, accompanied by four missionaries, of whom Diuna was one. Mr. Stevenson considers that clergyman to have been consecrated bishop of Mercia, in 655.—Bede. 206.

<sup>5</sup> Mr. Stevenson, with great probability, refers Wilfrid's Sussex mission to 681.—ib. 275.

<sup>6</sup> Mr. Stevenson adopts 603, as the most probable date of this conference. Other writers have taken 599, 601, 602, and 604. Camden thought the place, Aust, or Aust-clive, the usual spot for passing the Severn into Wales.—ib. 99.

<sup>7</sup> This is the council, omitted in the Concilia of Spelman and Wilkins, but now represented as real, and a legislative authority for the tripartite division of tythes. Mr. Goode thus renders the decree relating to this matter: "And respecting tythes, the king and the wise men have resolved and enacted, as is right, that a third part of those tythes which belong to a church must be given to (implying no more than towards) the repair of the church, and the second part to God's ministers, the third to God's poor, and needy slaves."—(Brit. Mag. Ap. 1838, p. 368.) Mr. Goode considers this no injunction for an equal division, but merely for a due consideration of both charity and church-repair.

<sup>8</sup> This date is adopted by Smith, the learned editor of Bede, "in which he is supported by Thorn, a writer whose local information entitles him to some credit."—STEVENSON'S Bede. 105.

Theodore consecrates Winfrid to Mercia . . . . .	672	Chad . . . . .	666
—— convenes the council of Hertford . . . . .	673	Wilfrid, born . . . . .	634
—— deprives Winfrid . . . . .	674	—— introduced to Eanfleda . . . . .	647
—— concurs in displacing Wilfrid . . . . .	678	—— retires to Lindisfarne . . . . .	648
—— presides at the council of Hatfield . . . . .	680	—— sets out for Italy . . . . .	653
—— renders a parting service to Wilfrid . . . . .	689	—— reaches Rome . . . . .	654
Brihtwald . . . . .	692	—— halts at Lyons on his return . . . . .	655
Tatwin . . . . .	732	—— leaves Lyons . . . . .	658
Nothelm . . . . .	736	—— tutor to Alchfrid, son of Oswy . . . . .	659
Cuthbert . . . . .	740	—— made by Alchfrid, abbot of Ripon . . . . .	661
Bregwin . . . . .	759	—— ordained priest at Ripon, by Agilbert . . . . .	664
Lambert . . . . .	762	—— pleads for Rome, at Whitby . . . . .	664
Athelard . . . . .	790	—— consecrated bishop by Agilbert . . . . .	665
Wulfred . . . . .	806	—— superseded by Chad . . . . .	666
Feologeld . . . . .	830	—— retires to Ripon . . . . .	667
Ceolnoth . . . . .	831	—— put into possession of his diocese . . . . .	670
Ethered . . . . .	870	—— ejected by Egfrid . . . . .	677
Plegmund . . . . .	890	—— preaches in Friesland . . . . .	678
Athelm . . . . .	915	—— favourably heard at Rome . . . . .	679
Wulfhelm . . . . .	924	—— imprisoned in England . . . . .	680
Odo . . . . .	938	—— converts Sussex . . . . .	681
Elsin . . . . .	958	—— restored to his diocese . . . . .	687
Dunstan, born . . . . .	920	—— again expelled . . . . .	692
—— at court . . . . .	940	—— again appeals to Rome . . . . .	679
—— abbot of Glastonbury . . . . .	943	—— partially restored . . . . .	705
—— an exile in Flanders . . . . .	955	—— dies . . . . .	709
—— recalled . . . . .	956	Wilfrid, junior . . . . .	718
—— bishop of Worcester . . . . .	957	Egbert . . . . .	732
—— bishop of London . . . . .	958	Elbert . . . . .	766
—— archbishop of Canterbury . . . . .	959	Eanbald . . . . .	780
—— escapes at Calne . . . . .	978	Eanbald, junior . . . . .	797
—— crowns Ethelred . . . . .	979	Wulsius . . . . .	812
—— dies . . . . .	988	Wimund . . . . .	831
Ethelgar . . . . .	988	Wulfhere . . . . .	854
Sigeric . . . . .	989	Ethelbald . . . . .	895
Ælfric . . . . .	994	Redeward . . . . .	921
Elphege . . . . .	1006	Wulfstan . . . . .	941
Living . . . . .	1013	Oskitel . . . . .	956
Ethelnoth . . . . .	1020	Ethelwold . . . . .	971
Eadsin . . . . .	1038	Oswald, bishop of Worcester . . . . .	960
Robert of Jumieges . . . . .	1050	—— supersedes the canons there . . . . .	975
Stigand . . . . .	1052	—— archbishop of York . . . . .	972
YORK.		Adulf . . . . .	992
Paulinus, consecrated by Justus . . . . .	625	Wulfstan, junior . . . . .	1003
—— baptises Eanfleda . . . . .	626	Elfric . . . . .	1023
—— baptises Edwin . . . . .	627	Kinsius . . . . .	1051
—— preaches in Lincolnshire . . . . .	628	Aldred <sup>1</sup> . . . . .	1061
—— receives the pall . . . . .	634
—— returns into Kent . . . . .	634
—— dies bishop of Rochester . . . . .	644

<sup>1</sup> Compiled from Godwin, Wharton, Le Neve, and Stevenson.

INDEX.

A.

ABINGDON abbey, foundation of, 184. dissolved, 186.

Absolution, the doctrine taught taken from St. Jerome, and subsequently adopted by Tyndale, 237.

Accidia, or Acedia, 330.

Acolyte, 270.

Adam and Eve, deliverance of, on Christ's death, 251.

Addi, a church founder, 85.

Adrian, Pope, receives messengers from Offa, 116. transmits the deuterocanonical decrees to Charlemain, 120.

Adrian, the friend and companion of Archbishop Theodore, 79. a spy upon his actions, 85. personally engaged in tuition, 86. taught Aldhelm, 99.

Ædilwalch, king of Sussex, conversion of, 71.

Ælfric, archbishop of Canterbury, obtains authority for ejecting the secular canons from his cathedral, 206. sometimes identified with the great Elfric, 241, 244.

Ælfsius, 243.

Æthelmar. See Ailmer.

Agatho, Pope, interferes unsuccessfully for Wilfrid, 82.

Agilbert, second bishop of Dorchester, 70. leads the Roman party in the Whitby conference, 72. translated to the see of Paris, 77. consecrates Wilfrid at Compeigne, Ib.

Agilulfus said to have stolen the bones of St. Benedict, 178.

Aidan, first bishop of Lindisfarne, a member of the ancient British church, 68. great excellence of, attested by the Roman party, 75.

Ailmer endows the monastery of Cerne, 219.

Alban, St., martyrdom of, 28. abbey in honour of, founded by Offa, 118. its domains exempted from Rome-scot, Ib.

Alchfrid, king of Northumbria, sends Wilfrid for consecration into Gaul, 77.

Alcuin, list of books by, in the York library, 105. birth of, 108. becomes a celebrated instructor, 109. goes to Rome for Eanbald's pall, Ib. introduced to Charlemain, Ib. becomes his instructor, 110. preferred to two abbeys, Ib. negotiates a treaty with Offa, Ib. retires to his abbey at Tours, 111. establishes a famous school there, Ib. dies, Ib. wrote by the desire of England against image-worship, 120. his work, probably, the Caroline Books, 121.

Aldhelm, 99. wrote in favour of the Roman Easter, Ib. introduced Latin composition into England, 100. said to have translated the Psalter, 297.

Alfred, stipulates for church payments with the Danes, 7. taken to Rome, 141. date of his birth, 143. applies to learning, 144. comes to the throne, 146. unfortunate and unpopular, Ib. concealed, 147, 163. reproached by the neatherd's wife, 147. comes forward and gains a decisive victory, 148. admits the Danes as colonists, 149. his literary works, Ib. his infirmities, 151. his economy of time, 152. his clocks, 153. his economy of money, and his foundations, 154. his mutilated Decalogue, 156. his religious opinions, 157. nature of his monastic societies, 168.

Alms-fee, 181.

Anchorites, 272.

Andover, council of, 191, 304.

Angles, continental home of, 36. English settlements of, Ib. final conquest of Mercia by, 38.

Anglia, East, conversion of, 67, 69.

Antichrist, belief in the temporary ascendancy of, 251.

Antioch, legend respecting, 254.

Antiquity against Romanism, 173.

Apocrisaries, 42.

Appeals to Rome begun by Wilfrid, 82, 88. their event injurious to the principle, 89. resorted to by Offa, 116. by a nobleman against Dunstan, 207.

Apulia, 214.

Archbishops publish legislative decrees, 212.

Architecture, Anglo-Saxon, 282.

Arianism, introduction of, into Britain, 29.

Aristobulus said to have been consecrated by St. Paul, bishop of Britain, 22.

Arthur, King, buried at Glastonbury, 171.

Ashes, benediction of, 334.

Asser, 144, 163.
 Assingdon, 282
 Athelm, Archbishop, 175.
 Athelney, the place of Alfred's retreat, 147. monastery founded there, 154.
 Athelstan, vigorous reign of, 164. grants privileges to founders of churches, 3, 165. guards the payment of tythes, 7, 164. date of his accession, 170. fond of Dunstan, 175. desires his retirement from court, 176. said to have been the first sovereign over the whole island, 198.
 Attrition, doctrine of, 87, 237.
 Audrey. See Etheldred.
 Augustine, first archbishop of Canterbury, recommended to use the quadripartite division of oblations, 8, 53. despatched as a missionary to England, 48. assumes episcopal functions, 50. claims miraculous powers, 51. allowed a latitude as to religious usages, 54. receives the pall, 55. holds conferences with the native clergy, 55, 57. unsuccessfully, 58. claims the archiepiscopate of Britain, Ib. dies, 59. consecrations by, 59, 60. said to have procured the slaughter of 1200 British monks, 59. legend respecting, 95. all his successors said to have been monks, 182.
 Augustine's oak, 55.
 Austin, St., controversy of, with Pelagius, 31.
 Avalon. See Glastonbury.
 Aylesford, battle of, 37.

B.

Banchor, or Bangor, slaughter of the British monks from, 58. situation of the monastery, Ib.
 Bapchild, 91.
 Baptism, legislative care of, 90, 277. not to be administered by affusion, 278. sponsors and promises exacted at, Ib. the great time for, 313.
 Bede, 100. one great repository of English religious tradition, 101. testifies the extensive services of British missionaries, 102. dies, 103. translation of his remains, 104.
 Bell-tower, 165.
 Benedict Biscop, 84. taught Bede, 100. imported glass, 153.
 Benedict of Nursia, founder of the Benedictines, birth and death of, 97. popularity of his order abroad, 168. his remains falsely said to have been furtively removed to Fleury, 178.

Benedictine order said to have been introduced by Wilfrid, 97, 168. really introduced by Dunstan, 179. overthrown by Edwy, 186. restored, Ib. considerably indebted for success to supposed miracles, 198. its triumph and overthrow aided by libels, 218.
 Beornhelm, advocate for the canons at Calne, 203.
 Berenger, or Berengarius, an early controversialist against transubstantiation, 161. opposed by Lanfranc, 228.
 Berghamsted, 91.
 Bertha, marriage of, 40. her daughter married into Northumbria, 62.
 Bertram. See Ratramn.
 Birinus converts Wessex, 70.
 Bishops, British, at early councils, 27. seven met Augustine, 57. Anglo-Saxon, election of, 261. profession of, Ib. functions of, 266. regular members of the legislature, 262. concurrent judges in the county-court, 263. provision for their souls, 266.
 Blood and strangled animals forbidden food, 126, 259.
 Bodmin, see of, founded, 264.
 Bondage of the will maintained, 249
 Boniface, originally Winifrid, archbishop of Mentz, dates respecting, 93, 112. testifies the payment of tythes, 93. recommends the prohibition of English female pilgrimages, 99. strenuous in procuring the submission of Germany to Rome, 112. fails of inducing England to follow his example, 114.
 Books, given by Gregory the Great, 52. imported by Benedict Biscop, 84. collected by Archbishop Egbert, 105.
Bretwalda, 39, 129.
 Brihtwald, Archbishop, authorizes the deprivation of Wilfrid, 88.
 Brithelm elected archbishop of Canterbury, 186.
 British monks, slaughter of, 58.
 Brunanburh, battle of, 164.
 Bures, 293.
Burh-geat-setl, 165.
 Burial in churches, allowance of, 280. origin of, 281.
 Bury, abbey of, 293.

C.

Cædmon, 298.
 Calne, 203.
 Candles, ritual extinction of, 313.
 benediction of, 333.
 Canonical hours, 312.
 Canons, secular, ejection of from

- Canterbury Cathedral, 169. hardships imposed upon, 195. resist Oswald, 197. yield, and thus establish a precedent, ib. bring forward no miracles, 198. supported by a majority of the upper classes, 200. disappointed of legislative protection, 201. restored, 202. again oppressed, 203. their fortunes at Canterbury, 206. libelled, as monks eventually were, 218. placed by Harold at Waltham, 236.
- Canute, law of, respecting church-repair, 12, 232. apparently promoted Elfric, 225, 231. holds a council at Winchester, 231. makes a pilgrimage to Rome, ib. builds a stone church, 282.
- Caroline Books, 121.
- Carpwald, conversion of, 67.
- Catechumens, 309.
- Cedwalla, tything of spoils by, 95.
- Celestius, the friend of Pelagius, 30.
- Celibacy, clerical, provision favourable to, 180, 231. legend to secure, 269.
- Cellach, 68.
- Ceolfrid, instructor of Bede, 100.
- Ceolwulf, 104.
- Cerdic, landing of, 38.
- Cerne Abbey, 219.
- Chad, St., made bishop of Lindisfarne, 77. resigns, 79. made bishop of Mercia, 80. properly at the head of the York episcopal series, 265. induced by Theodore to use a horse-wain, 290.
- Chad, made bishop of Essex, 69. pleads the British cause at Whitby, 72. brother to the saint, 290.
- Charlemain invites Alcuin, 109. his neglected education, 110. instructed by Alcuin, ib. confers abbeys upon him, ib. communicates the deuterio-Nicene canons to Offa, 120. publishes the Caroline Books as an authentic declaration against the worship of images, 121.
- Charles the Bald employs Erigena and Ratramn to examine the doctrine of Paschasius Radbert, 159.
- Chester-le-Street, see of, founded, 265.
- Chrim, 309.
- Christ's death, Anglo-Saxon date of, 252.
- Chronology, Anglo-Saxon, 345.
- Church, nature of, 250.
- Church building, admonition to, 213. deemed a satisfaction for sin, 288.
- Church repair, 181, 232.
- Churches, consecration of, 281. burial in, 280.
- Church-shots, 10, 92, 155, 164, 181, 192, 194, 212, 214.
- Clergy, termed secular by Romanists, the body originally formed, and yet continuing by regular succession in the Established Church, 13.
- Cloveshoo, 113.
- Coifi, the heathen pontiff, 66.
- College, Roman, endowed by Offa, 118. rebuilt by Ethelwulf, 139.
- Colman, bishop of Lindisfarne, 68. present at Whitby, 72. disgusted by the ridiculous termination of the conference, 73. his merit admitted by Bromton, 75.
- Communion of infants, 311, 318, 321.
- Confession, form of, 343.
- Conquest, sees at the, 265.
- Consanguinity, a bar to marriage, 279.
- Constantine, bishop of Cyprus, speech made by, in favour of images, exaggerated in the West, 123.
- Continenace, thought to be proved by resistance to decompositon, 291.
- Corbie, instructors from, obtained for the monastery at Abingdon, 184.
- Corfe Castle, 204.
- Cornwall, contempt of the papacy by, 163.
- Coronation oath, 276.
- Corporal, 315.
- Councils, Sardica, 27. Ariminium, ib. Verulam, 31. Augustine's Oak, 55. Second under Augustine, 57. Whitby, 72. Hertford, 80. Constantinople, 83. Roman, ib. Hatfield, ib. Nidd, 89. under Ina, 90. Bapchild, 91. Berghamsted, ib. Aix-la-Chapelle, 103. Orleans, 107. Cloveshoo, 113. Calcuth, 117. Nice, second, 120. Celychyth, 129. Vercelli, 161. under Archbishop Plegmund, 162. Grateley, 164. London, 180. Andover, 191. Wihtbordestane, ib. Winchester, 200. Kirtlington, 203. Amesbury, ib. Calne, ib. Eanham, 209. Haba, 213. Winchester, under Canute, 231. Neo-Cæsarea, 280. Chalcedon, 281. Mentz, 285.
- Crayford, battle of, 37.
- Crediton, see of, founded, 264.
- Creed to be explained, 251.
- Cross, outward veneration for, allowed by the Caroline Books, 123.
- Croyland, 295.
- Crucifix, speaking, 201.
- Cuthbert, St., alleged miracle of, 287. particulars of, 290. unfavourable to Wilfrid, ib. eventually shared a coffin with Bede, 104.

Cuthbert, Archbishop, letter to, from Boniface, 113.

Cynefryth, 291.

D.

Dalfinus, bishop of Lyons, 76.

Danish piracy renewed, 205.

Deacon, 270.

Dead, services for, legend in support of, 74. recommended in the Caroline Books, 124. doubts as to their value, 127.

Decalogue, Alfred's, 156. Elfric's, 325.

Defilement, religious, 260. probably adopted on the authority of Archbishop Theodore, Ib.

Deira, position and name of, 47.

Denewulf, supposed to be the neatherd with whom Alfred lodged at Athelney, 163. date of his death, Ib.

Deusdedit, Archbishop, 77.

Didan, 292.

Diuma, 68.

Dorchester, see of, founded, 70, 264.

Dunstan, father of English Benedictines, 98. born, 170. taken to Glastonbury, 171. dreams of monachism, 172. educated, Ib. delirious, 173. tonsured, 174. relaxations of, Ib. goes to court, 175. charged with magic, Ib. driven from court, 176. in love, 177. again attacked with fever, 178. becomes a monk, Ib. royal chaplain, Ib. abbot of Glastonbury, 179. insults Edwy, 185. exiled, 186. recalled, Ib. venerates the memory of Odo, 187. made bishop, 188. archbishop of Canterbury, 189. principal adviser of Edgar, Ib. least active in the great monastic triumvirate, 196. said to have been aided by a speaking crucifix, 201. influenced the succession of Edward the Martyr, 202. escapes, when the floor fell at Calne, 203. crowns Ethelred the Unready, 205. dies, 206. buried at Canterbury, 208. his remains said to have been removed to Glastonbury, Ib. this proved to be false, 209. his independent reply to the pope, 207. literary remains, 209. legend favourable to transubstantiation connected with his name, 228. held two sees together, 234.

Dunwich, see of, founded, 67.

Durham, see of, founded, 265.

E

Eadbald, 60, 61.

Eadbert, 104.

Eanbald, 109.

Eanfleda, birth of, 62. baptism, 63. marriage, 71. Romish prepossessions, Ib. patronises Wilfrid, 76.

Eanham, 209.

Easter, differently kept at the Northumbrian court, 72. ridiculous mode of adopting the Roman system, Ib. the question settled at Hertford, 81. legend in favour of the British system, 294.

Eata, 104.

Edgar, provides for the payment of tythes, 7, 191, 192. raised to the throne, 186. reigns in great prosperity, 189. enacts the payment of church-shots, 194. founds many monasteries, 195. gives licence for seeking relics, 199. holds a national assembly against the secular canons, 200. dies, 202. styles himself vicar of Christ, 208.

Edmund, St., the King, legend of, 293.

Edmund the Elder, provides for the payment of tythes and church-shots, 7, 180. founds Glastonbury Abbey, 179. holds a legislative council in London, 180. dates, Ib.

Edred, founds Abingdon Abbey, 184.

Edward the Elder, 161.

Edward the Martyr, 204. a day appointed to commemorate him, 210.

Edward the Confessor, enacts personal tythes, 10, 233. reign of, 232. founds Westminster Abbey, Ib. his laws, 232. takes the Jews under his protection, Ib. almost a Frenchman, 234. prefers foreigners to bishoprics, Ib.

Edwin, king of Northumberland, marries a Kentish princess, 61. escapes assassination, 62. his early difficulties, 63. has a remarkable vision, 64. dexterous use made of this to convert him, Ib. obtains power over most of England, 65. baptised, 66. falls in battle, 67.

Edwy, insulted by Dunstan, 185. curtailed of his power, 186. dies, 187.

Egbert, king of Wessex, last Bretwalda, 39, 129. lost his elder son, 135.

Egbert, archbishop of York, recommends the tripartite division of tythes, 8, 106. says that every tenth scat is due to the Church, 9. his history, 104. accepts the pall, 105. his Penitential, Ib. 126. his library, 105. his Excerpts, 106. death, 104. instructed Alcuin, 108.

Egfrid, King, rowed to Lindisfarne for Cuthbert, 290.

Egwin, bishop of Worcester, 121.

Elbert, archbishop of York, 108.

Elfreda, abbess, alleges her brother's determination to restore Wilfrid, 89.

Elfric, recommends the tripartite division of tythes, 9. vindicates the Reformation in a vital point, 216. highly venerates Ethelwold, 217. prejudiced against married clergymen, Ib. selected to regulate Cerne Abbey, 219. compiles homilies, Ib. a Latin grammar, 220. writes a life of Ethelwold, and other works, 222. his name ridiculously explained by Hardouin, Ib. his professional advancement, 223. conjectural history, Ib. probable date of his death, 225. discovery of his remains, Ib. fond of relics, 226. his memory involved in confusion by Osbern and Malmesbury, Ib. thought with Raban Maur upon transubstantiation, 228. uses Ratramn, 229. his homilies retrenched, 230. an authority against second marriages, 280. taught from St. Jerome the same doctrine that Tyndale did as to absolution, 237. entertained some belief in purgatorial fires, 238. took various liberties in translating Scripture, 299. identified by some with the archbishop of Canterbury of his name, 241. very particular as to the soundness of his doctrine, 219, 244. irreconcilable with later doctrines upon St. Peter's privileges and papal jurisdiction, 237. also with the doctrine of attrition, Ib. but slightly favourable to the invocation of departed spirits, 239. evidently wrote when theology was in a state of transition, 240. translated the Pentateuch and some other historical books of the Old Testament, 297. also Judith, 298. his name, probably, equivalent with Ælfsige, or Ælfsius, 243.

Elfric, bishop of Crediton, 227.

Elfric Bata, 226, 241.

Elfrida, 204.

Elgiva, offended with Dunstan, 185. banished to Ireland, 187. mutilated by Odo, Ib.

Elias, expected appearance of, on earth, 251.

Ella, settlement of, 38. first Bretwalda, 39.

Elmham, see of, 265.

Elphege the Bald, bishop of Winchester, ineffectually persuades Dunstan to become a monk, 177. succeeds, 178. first abbot of Bath, 226.

Elphege, archbishop of Canterbury, (St. Alphege,) goes to Rome for his pall, 209. slain by the Danes, 212.

not admitted as a true martyr by Lanfranc, Ib.

Elsin, elected archbishop of Canterbury, 188.

Ely, 223, 284.

Ember weeks, 258, 259.

Emma, queen to Ethelred, 224.

Erigena, 144. patronised by Alfred, 158. wrote against Radbert, 159. death, 160. condemned by the council of Vercelli, 161. his identity with Alfred's friend doubted by Mabillon, 158.

Essex, conversion of, 69.

Ethandun, battle of, 149.

Ethelbald, king of Mercia, 113.

Ethelbald, son of Ethelwulf, 140, 145.

Ethelbert, king of Kent, dates, 39, 41. marries Bertha, 40. baptised, 41. receives Augustine, 49. obtains a conference for him with the native clergy, 56. marries again, 60.

Ethelbert, brother of Alfred, 145.

Ethelburga, or Tate, 61. marries Edwin, king of Northumbria, 62. gives birth to Eanfleda, Ib. flees back into Kent, 67.

Etheldred, or 'Audrey, St., marries Egfrid, king of Northumbria, 81. has Wilfrid for spiritual adviser, Ib. becomes a nun, 82. her ascetic habits, 291.

Ethelfrith, or Ethelfrid, slaughters the Bangor monks, 58.

Ethelred the Unready, suspected enactment of, for the tripartite division of tythes, 9, 215. crowned, 205. gives authority for displacing the secular canons of Canterbury, 206. holds a council at Eanham, 209. at Haba, 213. sent, apparently, Elfric to Normandy with the queen, 224. coronation service of, 277.

Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, birth of, 184. first abbot of Abingdon, Ib. father of monks, 185. date of his death, Ib. a main instrument for oppressing the secular canons, 196. a great provider of relics, 199. kind to Elfric, 217. restorer of the Fen abbeys, 223. transferred monks from Abingdon to Winchester, 224. his life written by Elfric, 222. this edited with some additions by Wulfstan, 217, 227.

Ethelwulf, father of Alfred, instructed by Swithin, 135. his decimation, 137. goes to Rome, 139. marries Judith, 140. curtailed of his power, Ib. dies, Ib.

Ethered, brother of Alfred, 145.

Eusebius, testimony of, to the apostolical conversion of Britain, 20.

Eves, keeping of, 254.

Excommunication, papal, alleged case of, under Edward the Elder, 161.

Exeter, capture of, by Athelstan, 164. see of, founded, 264.

Exorcist, 270.

F.

Fasting, the eucharist why to be taken, 321.

Fasts, 258. legitimate, Ib.

Felix, bishop of Dunwich, 67.

Females allowed to possess and dispose of property, 278.

Fen abbeys, restoration of, 223.

Ferrieres, 110.

Festivals, 210, 256.

Fire, Pagan notion of, 316.

Fleury, fame of, 171. the place where Dunstan became a monk, 178. and Oswald, 197. said falsely to contain the bones of St. Benedict, 178.

Foreigners, indiscreet promotion of, by Edward the Confessor, 234.

Formosus, Pope, said to have excommunicated Edward the Elder and his people, 161. date of his death, and indignities offered to his remains, 162.

Fornication, sufficient for the dismissal of a wife, 279.

Frankish languagelike Anglo-Saxon, 48.

Freewill, 250.

French spoken at the Confessor's court, 234.

Friday, an unfortunate day with Adam and Eve, 252.

Frideswide, St., 292. her church at Oxford, 282.

Fursej, a missionary in East Anglia, 69.

G.

Gang (Rogation) days, 214.

Germain, St. see of, 264.

Germanus, two missions of, into Britain, 31, 32.

Gildas, intimation of, as to the conversion of Britain, 20.

Glastonbury, religious fame of, 23. 24. said to have been granted to Joseph of Arimathea, 23. highly venerated, 170. a royal domain, Ib. said to be the burial-place of Patrick, Ib. King Arthur's remains found there, 171. its ancient monastery destroyed, Ib. a new one founded, 179. this the first English Benedictine abbey, Ib.

its temporary dissolution, 186. falsely said to possess the remains of Dunstan, 209.

Gloucester, 187.

God, origin of the word, 245.

God, love of, to be tested by practice, 247.

Godeschalc, predestinarian controversy excited by, in the ninth century, 163.

Godrun, or Guthrum, the Dane, defeated by Alfred, 148. baptised, 149.

Good Friday, 311.

Gospels, Anglo-Saxon translation of, 297. Teutonic Harmony of, 283, 299.

Greensted, remarkable timber church of, 282.

Gregory the Great asserts the desire of England for conversion, 40. particulars of, 42. generous devotion of, 43. elected pope, Ib. offended by the assumptions of John the Faster, 44. denounces the title of Universal Bishop, and adopts that of Servant of the Servants of God, Ib. compliments the murderous usurper, Phocas, 45. said to have been turned to the conversion of Britain by an occurrence in the slave-market, 46. despatches Augustine as missionary, 48. admits his pretensions to miraculous powers, 51. fond of the marvellous, 52. sends relics, vestments, and books into England, Ib. answers Augustine's questions, 53. sends him a pall, 55 gives instructions for dividing Britain into dioceses, Ib. general view of his religious principles, 73.

Gregory, bishop of Ostia, papal legate to Offa, 117.

Grimbald, an instructor of Alfred, 144.

Guildship, 276.

Guthlac of Croyland, 183, 295.

Guthrum. See Godrun.

Gyrovagi, or wandering monks, 273.

H.

Haba, 213.

Hardicanute, 232.

Hardouin, ridiculous language of, respecting Elfric, 222.

Harold Harefoot, 232.

Harold II., 235.

Hatfield, 83.

Heathen, Anglo-Saxon use of the word, 308.

Heliland, or Teutonic Harmony of the Gospels, 283, 299.

Hengist, establishment of, 37.

Hereford, see of, founded, 264.
 Herstan, 170, 171.
 Hertford, 80. canon enacted there respecting dioceses, 81, 265.
 Hexham, see of, 265.
 Hinguar, 293.
Hirman. See Hyreman.
 Holy water and chrism used as charms, 287.
 Homilies, Elfric's, whence compiled, 219. their use authorized by the archbishop of Canterbury, Ib. challenge a rigid scrutiny into the soundness of their doctrine, Ib. fatal to the doctrine of transubstantiation, 216, 229. dates, 241.
 Honorius, Pope, indiscretion of, 83.
 Horsa slain, 37.
 Horse-wain used by St. Chad, 290.
 Hours, canonical, 312.
Housel, 322.
 Hoxne, 293.
Hunsl, 322.
Hyreman, 213.

I.

Image of God, how understood by the Anglo-Saxons, 249.
 Image worship indignantly rejected by ancient England, 16, 120. a source of Jewish and Mahometan reviling, 119. the foundation stone of papal sovereignty, Ib. established by the second Council of Nice, 120. Alcuin employed in confuting it, Ib. solidly and completely attacked in the Caroline Books, 121. rejected by Britain, Gaul, and Germany, 123. approach to it in England, 130. seemingly established in Alfred's time, 165.
 Imposition of hands at ordination, 268.
 Impostors, monkish, 183.
 Impostures, monastic, 198.
 Ina, laws of, 90. the English college at Rome, founded by, 139.
 Invocation of saints slightly authorized in the Saxon homilies, 239.
 Irenæus, testimony of, to the probable conversion of Britain, 19.
 Irish pilgrims of Glastonbury, 170. commonly lived by tuition, 172.
 Ivo of Chartres, 272.

J.

Jarrow, 100.
 Jaruman, 68.
 Jerome, St., the Biblical translator of ancient England, 300. his doctrine of absolution entertained, 237.

Jews protected by Edward the Confessor, 233.
 John the Faster, 44.
 Joseph of Arimathea regarded as the British apostle, 23.
 Judith, book of, made into a poetical work, 298.
 Judith, queen to Ethelwulf, 140. afterwards to her step-son, 144. stimulates Alfred to learning, Ib.
 Judgment, day of, to see priests and bishops leading their several flocks to the tribunal, 271.
 Justin Martyr, testimony and death of, 19.
 Justinian, law of, relating to the building of churches, 281. to the patronage of them, 85.
 Justus, Bishop, 59—62.
 Jutes, emigration and settlements of, 36.

K.

Kent, kingdom of, founded, 37.
 Kenulf, king of Mercia, 130.
 Kenulf, bishop of Winchester, 223.
 Kings, Anglo-Saxon, religious abdications of, 104.
 Kinsy, 185.
 Kiss, holy, 313.
 Kynedrid, 170.
 Kynegils, king of Wessex, converted, 70.

L.

Lambert, Archbishop, embroiled with Offa, 116.
 Lanfranc, Archbishop, professional eminence of, gained in controversy with Berenger, 228. denies Elphege to be a martyr, 212. ejector of the secular canons from Canterbury Cathedral, 169. requires a new profession from Remigius, 235.
 Lastingham, 79.
 Latin partially spoken, 114.
 Laurentius, consecrated for the see of Canterbury, 60. writes to the Scottish clergy, Ib. saves the Kentish church by a successful stratagem, 61. dies, 62.
 Legates, papal, first appearance of, in England, 117.
 Leicester, see of, founded, 264.
 Leo, Emperor, orders the removal of images from churches, 119.
 Lerins, 48.
 Levitical uncleanness admitted by the Anglo-Saxons, 126.
 Lichfield, archbishopric founded, 116. its suffragans, 117. reduced, 118.

- Light-shot*, stipulated for by Alfred, 155. when paid, 214.
- Lindisfarne, see of, founded, 68, 265. the cathedral wooden, 282.
- London, first Saxon bishop of, 59. conversion of the diocese, 69. pestilence in, under Edgar, 190.
- Lord's Prayer to be explained, 251.
- Lucius, King, alleged application of, to Rome, 25.
- Luidhard, Bishop, 40.
- Lupus, St., abbey of, at Troyes, 110.
- M.
- Malmesbury, abbey of, 160.
- Malmesbury, William of, relates an incredible case of papal interference, 161. speaks confusedly of Elfric, 227. betrayed by zeal for transubstantiation into a ludicrous attack upon Raban Maur, 228.
- Man*, origin of the word, 245.
- Mancus*, 139.
- Mand*, 313.
- Mansus*, Frankish, 138.
- Mark, 139.
- Marriage, blessed by the priest, 279.
- Marriage-settlements, 278.
- Marriages, second, not blessed by the Church, 279.
- Martial, a couple mentioned by, connected with the conversion of Britain, 23.
- Maundy Thursday, 313.
- Maur. See Raban.
- Maurice, Emperor, gives the title of Universal to the bishop of Constantinople, 44.
- Mellitus, 59—62.
- Melote*, 273.
- Mercia, kingdom of, founded, 38. conversion of, 68.
- Metropolitans, late introduction of, into Scotland, 134.
- Michael, St., feast of, 214.
- Military tenure, 275.
- Milton, supposed to have taken hints from Junius, 298.
- Minster*, origin of the word, 169.
- Minster-tythe to be distinguished from parochial, 216.
- Monasteries, the earliest Anglo-Saxon, nature of, 168, 169.
- Monasteries, lay or secular, 132.
- Monasteries, important places of education, 218. extensively founded, 97. plundered by the Northmen, 129.
- Monastic taste, decline of, 168. revival and evils of, 179.
- Monks, ordinarily laymen, 272. kinds of, Ib. wandering, 183, 273. Hertford canon respecting, 274.
- Monothelite opinions, 83.
- Morning's gift, 278.
- Mundbora*, 278.
- N.
- Narcissus, 316.
- Neot, St., rebukes Alfred, 146. goes on pilgrimages to Rome, 156.
- Nicodemus, pseudo-gospel of, translated, 298.
- Nidd, council of the, 89.
- Nones*, 258.
- Northumbria, ancient extent of, 69. conversion of, 68.
- Nynian, missionary to the southern Picts, 75.
- O.
- Oaths, judicial, forbidden on festivals, 211, 286.
- Oblata*, 237.
- Odo, Archbishop, denies the exemption of tythe-payers from the claims of the poor, 8, 183. at the council of London, 180. account of him, 182. his canons and epistle, 183. his barbarity to Elgiva, 187. highly esteemed by contemporaries, Ib. legend appended to his name in favour of transubstantiation, 228.
- Offa, king of the Mercians, guilty career of, 115. enraged with Archbishop Lambert, 116. determines upon founding an archbishopric at Lichfield, Ib. seeks papal sanction, Ib. receives the first papal legates, 117. founds the abbey of St. Alban's, 118. goes to Rome, and settles Rome-scot upon the college there, Ib. first known to have been called consecrated king, 277.
- Offertory, 318.
- Oflet*, 237, 318, 319.
- Oil, hallowing of, 309.
- Ordeals, etymology of, 283. form of, Ib. condemned by the Roman church, 285. forbidden on festivals, 286. abolished in England, 285.
- Orders, examination for, 266. forms used at conferring, 268. inferior, 270.
- Organs known to the Anglo-Saxons, 282.
- Osbern, absurd mention of Elfric by, 226. the humble friend of Lanfranc, 228.
- Osburgh, mother of Alfred, 143.
- Osculatory, 313.
- Osculum pacis*, 313.

Osgar, sent to Fleury for instruction, by Ethelwold, 184.

Ostuary, 270.

Oswald, King, determines upon the conversion of Northumbria, 68. instrumental in converting Wessex, 70. acts as interpreter to Aidan, 294.

Oswald, Archbishop, made a Benedictine at Fleury, 197. first succeeded in converting a cathedral into a monastery, ib.

Oswald's Law, 197.

Oswy, king of Northumbria, sends Agilbert as missionary to Wessex, 70. declines conformity to Rome, 72. ridiculous reason for altering his opinion, ib.

P.

Paganism, the chief source of Roman peculiarities, 16.

Pall, the, sent to Augustine, 55. to Paulinus, 67. presented to Boniface, 112. not sought by any archbishop of York between Paulinus and Egbert, 104. sent to the archbishop of Lichfield, 116. never applied for by Stigand, 235.

Papal interference, disregarded by the Anglo-Saxon people, 82, 88, 89. established in Germany by Boniface, 112. introduced into England by Offa, 116. resisted by Dunstan, 207. despised in Cornwall, 163.

Papal patrimony, 47.

Paradise, legend about, 252.

Parasceve, 311.

Parma, 109.

Paschasius Radbert, eucharistic doctrines of, 159.

Patrick, St., said to be buried at Glastonbury, 24, 170.

Patronage, ecclesiastical, origin of, 2, 4, 85, 165.

Paulinus, one of the second supply of Roman missionaries, 62. accompanies Ethelburga into the North, ib. acquainted with a remarkable incident in the life of Edwin, 63. baptises Eanfleda, ib. succeeds in converting Edwin, 65. holds a public baptism at York, 66. made archbishop there, and receives the pall, 67. flees into Kent, and dies bishop of Rochester, ib.

Paul, St., supposed services of, in the conversion of Britain, 21, 22.

Paul's, St., London, foundation of, 59.

Pax, 313.

Peada, 68.

Pelagianism, introduction of, into Britain, 31. date of, ib. suppressed, 31, 32.

Pelagius, particulars of, 30.

Penance, Anglo-Saxon view of, 125. Alfred's, 159. sacramental, unknown, 289.

Penitential, Theodore's, 87. Egbert's, 124.

Penitential system, Anglo-Saxon, delusive nature of, 288. its efficacy doubted, 289.

Penny, Anglo-Saxon, value of, 213.

Peter, St., alleged privileges of, not believed by the Anglo-Saxons, 237. alleged flagellation of Laurentius by, 61.

Peter-pence, confirmed under Edward the Confessor, 233. See Rome-scot.

Peterborough, restored by means of Ethelwold, 223. apparently the place of Elfrie's interment, 225.

Phocas, usurpation of, recognised at Rome, 45.

Picts, southern, a native race in communion with Rome, 75.

Pilgrimages to Rome, passion for, 98. female, evils of, ib.

Plegmund, Archbishop, a probable compiler of the Saxon Chronicle, 141. an instructor of Alfred, 144. said to have presided in a synod for supplying Wessex with bishops, 162, 163.

Plough-alms stipulated for by Alfred, 155.

Preaching required every Sunday, 219.

Precedence, episcopal, 265.

Precentor, John the, brought over by Benedict Biscop, 84. present at the council of Hatfield, ib. a spy upon Theodore, 85<sup>1</sup>.

Predestinarian controversy, 31, 160.

Preparation, the, 311.

Pride, fatal nature of, taught by the Anglo-Saxons, 248.

Priests, prescribed duties of, 268.

Psalms, repetition of, deemed meritorious, 288.

Psalter, translation of, 297.

Puch, a church founder, 85.

<sup>1</sup> The Precentor seems to have been conspicuous for naturalizing the Roman service in England. "If reliance can be placed in the statement of a MS. cited by Usher (Primord. p. 323), it would appear that the Gallican Liturgy had been introduced into England by Germanus and Lupus, and probably had continued in general use until the time of Pope Agatho."—STEVENSON'S Bede. 288.

Purgatory, doubtful language respecting, 127, 238.

Q.

Quadripartite division of oblations and tythes, 53, 54.

Quichelm, treacherous message of, 62.

R.

Raban Maur, ridiculous attack upon, by Malmesbury, 228. eucharistic doctrine of, Ib.

Radberr. See Paschasius.

Ramsey, 197.

Ratramn, employed by Charles the Bald to examine the doctrine of Radbert, 161. his treatise used by Elfric, 229.

Reader, 270.

Redwald, temporary conversion of, 67.

Reformation, erroneous views of, as a precedent, 13.

Relics, sent over by Gregory, 52. imported by Benedict Biscop, 84. veneration of, allowed in the Caroline Books, 123. to be deposited in churches, on consecration, 130. sometimes fraudulently acquired, 199. highly esteemed by Elfric, 226.

Remigius, profession and consecration of, 235.

Renunciations, baptismal, 278.

Repton, 295.

Ricula, mother to Sebert, 59.

Ripon, 77, 88, 89.

Robert of Jumieges, archbishop of Canterbury, 234.

Rochester, see of, founded, 264. in the patronage of Canterbury, Ib.

Rogation-days. See Gang-days.

Roman mission, services of, to Britain, often much overrated, 69.

Romans, insatiable cupidity of, 116.

Rome, English college at, founded, 139. burnt and rebuilt, Ib. endowed and benefited, 118, 139, 158.

Rome, no profession of obedience to, exacted from Anglo-Saxon bishops, 261.

Rome-scot granted by Offa, 118. confirmed by Alfred, 155.

S.

Sabbath, the holy, 311, 317.

Sabbatum, how used, 311.

Sacrificium, how used anciently, 320.

Sacrifice, eucharistic, 321.

Saints, intercession of, maintained in the Caroline Books, 124. authorized apparently by Elfric, 240.

Salisbury, see of, founded, 264.

Salvation, offer of, considered universal, 240.

Sanctuary, protection of, 275.

Sarabaites, 272.

Saturday, holy, 311.

Saxons, invitation to, 32. continental home of, 36. English settlements of, Ib. Teutonic origin of, 37.

Sceat, value of, 108. every tenth claimed for religion by Archbishop Egbert, Ib.

Scottish ordinations, not admitted, 134.

Scripture, vernacular versions of, by Bede, 112. by Alfred, 150. by Elfric, 220, 242. apparently never completely translated, 296. the expediency of this doubted, Ib.

Sebastian, St., 293.

Sebert, 59. sons of, apply for sacramental bread, 60.

Selsey, see of, founded, 71.

Sergius, Pope, sent for Bede, 101.

Shaftesbury, monastery of, 154.

Sherborne, see of, founded, 264.

Sick men's oil, 309.

Sidnacester, see of, founded, 265.

Sigbert, conversion of, 67.

Sigeric, or Siricius, Archbishop, period of his primacy, 217. approves Elfric's homilies, 219.

Sigwerd, 297.

Slaves to be manumitted at a bishop's death, 266.

Sleepers, Seven, legend of, 253.

Sodalities, 275.

Soul-shot, 210. provided for in guilds, 276. and in wills, 280.

Sponsors, 278.

Stephen, Pope, 162.

Stigand, Archbishop, promotion of, 234. never applied for a pall, 225. yet received as primate, Ib.

Streaneshalh. See Whitby.

Subdeacon, 270.

Subtraction of tythes made penal, 192.

Sully, Henry de, 171.

Sunday, legislative care of, 91, 210. time included in, 92, 254. canons for hallowing, 253. legendary reasons for this, Ib. alleged distinctions of, 254.

Supper-Day, the Lord's, 311.

Susceptores, 278.

Sussex, conversion of, 71.

Swithin, St., instructor of Ethelwulf,

185. no particulars of his life known, Ib. said to have advised Ethelwulf's decimation, 136.

T.

Taper-hallowing, 316.

Tate. See Ethelburga.

Tertullian, testimony of, to the early conversion of Britain, 20.

Thane, dignity of, allowed to founders of churches, 165. to unmarried clergymen, 231.

Theobald, Archbishop, 264.

Theodore, Archbishop, the originator of ecclesiastical patronage in England, 2, 85. established doctrine on the first general councils, 14, 83. appointed to Canterbury, 78. parent of Anglo-Saxon literature, 79. interferes for Wilfrid, Ib. convenes a synod at Hertford, 80. decides against Wilfrid, 82. suspected at Rome, 84. dies, 86. personally engaged in tuition, Ib. teaches the sufficiency of confession to God alone, 87. interferes at last for Wilfrid, Ib. induced Chad to use a horse-wain, 290.

Theodoret, testimony of, to the apostolical conversion of Britain, 22.

Theodulf, bishop of Orleans, 269.

Theophylact, bishop of Todi, one of the first papal legates in England, 117.

Thorney, 223.

Tinel, 165.

Tours, famous school of, formed by Alcuin, 111.

Tracts, meaning of, 314.

Trade, profits upon, made tythable, 233.

Tradition, religious, of England, unfavourable to Romanism, 101.

Transubstantiation, rejection of, by ancient England, 15. incidental testimony against, 130. examined under direction of Charles the Bald, when broached by Paschasius Radbert, 159. decisively overthrown by Elfric, 216, 221. intentionally contradicted by the Anglo-Saxon Church, 229. the real meaning of testimony cited from antiquity to favour it, 236. legends in support of it, 228. no profession of belief in it required from Anglo-Saxon bishops, 261. no inquiry respecting it at ordination, 268.

Trinoda Necessitas, 137, 275.

Tripartite division of tythes, recommended by Archbishop Egbert, 106. by Elfric, and perhaps Theodore, 216.

thought to have been enacted under Ethelred, 215.

Truce of religion, 211, 286.

Trumhere, 68.

Tuda, 75.

Tyndale, doctrine of, as to absolution, entertained by the Anglo-Saxons, 237.

Tythes, payment of, no release from the claims of the poor, 8, 118. antiquity of, 93. apparently paid by the ancient Britons, 95. often surrendered, apparently, by bishops, in Archbishop Egbert's time, 106. payment of, extended to money, 108. said to have been first legally imposed by Ethelwulf, 137. incorrectly, it seems, 138. stipulated for by Alfred with the Danes, 155. enacted at Grateley, 164. at London, 181. at Andover, 191. at Wihthordestane, Ib. afterwards under Edgar, 192. at Eanham, 210. at Haba, 214. personal, by Edward the Confessor, 233.

U.

Uction, extreme, Anglo-Saxon use of, 309.

Usury, severity against, 233.

V.

Verulam, council of, 31.

Virgilius, archbishop of Arles, 50.

Visitations, episcopal, 266.

Vitalian, Pope, appoints Theodore to Canterbury, 78. suspicious of his conformity, 85.

W.

Wager of battle, 286.

Wakes, 280.

Waltham Abbey, foundation of, 235.

Wantage, 143.

Warham, Archbishop, directs a search for the remains of Dunstan, 209.

Water, holy, 317.

Wearmouth, 100.

Wells, see of, founded, 264.

Wensine, Benedictine conversion of, 197.

Wessex, conversion of, 70.

Whitby, council of, 72.

Wigfrith, 183.

Wighard, appointed to Canterbury, 78.

Wihthordestane, council of, 191, 304.

Wihtrud, king of Kent, 91.

Wilfrid converts Sussex, 71, 83, 87.

tutor to Eanfleda's son, 71. pleads for Rome, at Whitby, 72. appointed bishop, 76. early history, Ib. sent for consecration into Gaul, 77. prevented from taking possession of his see, Ib. obtains it by Theodore's interference, 80. sends representatives to the council of Hertford, Ib. abets the asceticism of Etheldred, 81. deprived, 82. appeals to Rome, Ib. fails of gaining English concurrence in the papal decision, Ib. imprisoned, 83. preaches in Friesland, 87. eventually served by Theodore, Ib. restored to his bishopric, 88. again exiled, Ib. again appeals to Rome, Ib. the favourable decision again disregarded in England, Ib. partially successful, 89. canonized, Ib. date of his death, Ib. delusively represented as an authority for appeals to Rome, Ib. claims the introduction of the Benedictine system into England, 97, 168.

William the Conqueror, exemption by, of bishops from attending the county courts, 263.

Willibrord, 103, 111.

Wilton, battle of, 146. see of, founded, 264.

Winchester, see of, founded, 264. dedication of the church in the old monastery of, 295. consecration of the cathedral of, 281. council of, 200. difficulties experienced in ejecting the secular canons from the cathedral of, 198.

Wine, Bishop, consecrates St. Chad, 78.

Winfrid, bishop of Mercia, deprived, 81.

Winfrid. See Boniface.

Witena-gemot, constitution of, 263.

Worcester, see of, founded, 264. holden by Dunstan with London, 188, 234. successful management of Oswald for ejecting the secular canons from the cathedral of, 197. the first instance of such dispossession, Ib. holden in commendam by Benedictine archbishops of York from the conversion of its cathedral into a monastery of regulars, 225.

Wulfhelm, Archbishop, 164.

Wulfhere, king of the Mercians, sponsor to Ædilwalch, 71.

Wulfred, Archbishop, 130.

Wulfsine, bishop of Sherborne, engages Elfric to prepare one of his two famous epistles, 220.

Wulfstan, two archbishops of York so named, dates respecting, 221. Elfric's celebrated epistle written to the latter, Ib.

Wulfstan, editor of Elfric's Life of Ethelwold, with some additions, 184, 217, 222.

Y.

Yatton. See Ethandun.

York, intended to have twelve suffragans, 55. long intermission of the pall to the archbishops of, 104. library at, 105. famous school of, 109. see of, holden in commendam with Worcester, because the cathedral continued in possession of secular canons, 225.

Z.

Zachary, Pope, 114.

LONDON :
HARRISON AND CO., PRINTERS,
ST. MARTIN'S LANE.

APPROVED BOOKS

ON THE

SUPPLEMENTARY CATALOGUES OF THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

---

The Works distinguished by a Star, are those published under the direction of the Committee of General Literature and Education.

---

- *Algebra. A First Book of Algebra, specially adapted for Beginners. 1s. 6d.
- Algebra. The Elements of Algebra, chiefly intended for the use of Schools and the lower classes in Colleges. By the Rev. T. G. Hall, M.A., Professor of Mathematics in King's College, London. 6s. 6d.
- *America. Sketches of the Animal and Vegetable Productions of America, by Mary Roberts, Author of Domesticated and Wild Animals. With Engravings, 3s. 6d., bound and gilt.
- *Ancient History. The Elements of Ancient History. New Edition, 2s. See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. VI.; and Modern History.
————— The Student's Manual of Ancient History; containing the Political History, Geographical Position, and Social State of the Principal Nations of Antiquity; by W. C. Taylor, LL.D. Third Edition, enlarged. 10s. 6d. See Modern History.
- Anglo-Saxon Church; its History, Revenues, and General Character. By the Rev. Henry Soames, M.A., Author of Elizabethan Religious History. Second Edition, 10s. 6d.
- *Animals. The Book of Animals, with many Engravings. Sixth Edition, 1s. 6d. See Birds, Fishes, Reptiles, Shells, Trees.
- *Arithmetic Taught by Questions. Sixth Edition, 1s. 6d.
- *————— Instructions for Teaching Arithmetic to Little Children, by the Rt. Rev. T. V. Short, D.D., Lord Bishop of Sodor and Man. Eighth Edition, 6d.
- *————— Hints for Teaching Decimal and Vulgar Fractions, by the Same. 8d.
- *Astronomy. Outlines of Astronomy, by the Rev. Professor Hall, King's College, London. Ninth Edition, 10d.
————— Lectures on Astronomy, delivered at King's College, London, by the Rev. Prof. Moseley. Many Cuts. 5s. 6d.
————— Recreations in Astronomy, by the Rev. Lewis Tomlinson, M.A. Many Engravings. 4s. 6d.

Bible Maps, accompanied by Explanatory Memoirs, and forming a complete Historical and Descriptive Atlas of Scripture Geography, the Ancient Authorities being verified and corrected, from the information of Travellers and Writers up to the present time; together with a copious Index of Scriptural and Modern Names. By William Hughes, F.R.G.S.; the Maps beautifully coloured. Whole bound in Cloth, 7s. 6d.

Bible Maps for Schools 3s. sewed.

*Bible Spelling Book, with many Cuts. New Edition. Two Parts, 4d. each.

*Bible Word-Book; or, the Rudiments of English Grammar taught by the Words of the Old and New Testament, classed according to the Parts of Speech, and arranged according to the Number of Syllables. Second Edition, 1s.

Biographical Sketches, selected from the Saturday Magazine. With Illustrations. 1s. 4d.

*Biography. Readings in Biography; a Selection of the Lives of Eminent Men of all Nations. Fourth Edition, 4s. 6d.

*Birds. The Book of Birds, with many Engravings. Fourth Edition, 1s. 6d. See Animals, Fishes, Reptiles, Shells, Trees.

*— A Familiar History of Birds, their Nature, Habits, and Instincts, by the Right Rev. E. Stanley, Lord Bishop of Norwich. Two Vols., with Engravings. Third Edition, 7s.

*Botany. The Elements of Botany, with many Engravings. Fifth Edition, 2s.

British Months, a Poem, by the Right Rev. Richard Mant, D.D., Lord Bishop of Down and Connor. Two Volumes, 9s.

Butler. Memoirs of the Life, Character, and Writings of Bishop Butler, by the Rev. T. Bartlett, M.A., Rector of Kingstone, &c. With fine Portrait. Octavo, 12s.

*Calendar. The Book of the Calendar, the Months, and the Seasons. New Edition, 2s. See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. IV.

*Class Reading Book; designed to furnish Youth with useful Information on various Subjects. By George Ludlow, Master in Christ's Hospital. Third Edition enlarged, 3s. bound.

Chemistry. An Introduction to Chemical Philosophy, being a Preparatory View of the Forces which concur to the Production of Chemical Phenomena, by J. F. Daniell, Professor of Chemistry, King's College, London. New Edition, revised and much enlarged. Octavo, 21s.

*Christians. The Lives of Eminent Christians, by the Rev. R. B. Hone, M.A. Four Volumes, Foolscep 8vo., with Portraits, 4s. 6d. each.

Christians. The Early Christians; their Manners and Customs, Trials and Sufferings, by the Rev. W. Pridden, M.A. Fourth Edition, 4s.

*Christmas Carols (with Music); a Series of Original Sacred Songs, suitable for the Festival of Our Lord's Nativity; adapted to Select Music, and to various National Airs; arranged for one, two, and three Voices, with Accompaniments for the Piano-Forte. Fourth Edition, 4s.

Church. First Sundays at Church; or Familiar Conversations on the Morning and Evening Services, by the Rev. J. E. Riddle, M.A. Fourth Edition, 3s. 6d.

*Churchman's Almanack. Published annually, 2d. and 4d.

*Church Scholar's Reading Book, containing Readings in various Branches of Knowledge. Selected from the Saturday Magazine, for the use of Diocesan and other Schools, with a copious Explanatory Index to each Volume. Three Volumes, either of which may be had separately, 3s. each.

*Colliery Tale, or Village Distress. 3d.

Columbus. The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus, and his Discovery of the New World; with Engravings. Second Edition, 2s. 6d.

*Conversations of a Father with his Children. Two Volumes with many Cuts. Fifth Edition, 5s. 6d.

Cook. The Life, Voyages, and Discoveries of Captain Cook. Many Cuts. Second Edition, 2s. 6d.

*Crusaders; or Scenes, Events, and Characters, from the Times of the Crusaders, by Thomas Keightley. Two Volumes, with Engravings. 11s.

Deaf and Dumb Boy, a Tale by the Rev. W. Fletcher, M.A. Second Edition, 2s. 6d.

*Domesticated Animals, considered with reference to Civilization and the Arts, by Mary Roberts. Many Cuts. Fifth Edition, 3s. 6d., bound and gilt. See Wild Animals; and Sketches of the Animal and Vegetable Productions of America.

*Education and Treatment of Children; The Mother's Book, adapted to the Use of Parents and Teachers. Third Edition, 2s. 6d.

Elizabethan Religious History, by Henry Soames, M.A., Author of The History of the Reformation; The Anglo-Saxon Church, &c. Octavo, 16s.

*England. Outlines of the History of England, by George Hogarth. Eleventh Edition, with Cuts, 1s. 3d. See Rome, Greece, Sacred History.

- *England. A School History of England; with a copious Chronology. Tables of Contemporary Sovereigns, and Questions for Examination, abridged from the Family History of England. Strongly bound, 6s.
- *———— The Family History of England, by the Rev. G. R. Gleig, M.A. With an extensive Series of Pictorial Illustrations. Three Volumes, at 6s. 6d. each.
- *English Grammar, by the Rev. Dr. Russell, late Head Master of the Charter House. Ninth Edition, 1s. 6d.
- *English Literature. Readings in English Prose Literature; containing Choice Specimens from the best English Writers, with Essays on English Literature. Third Edition, 4s. 6d. See Readings in Poetry.
- Euclid. The Figures of Euclid, with Questions and a Praxis of Geometrical Exercises, by the Rev. J. Edwards, M.A., King's College. Second Edition, 3s.
- Fables and Classical Sketches, by a Clergyman. With Illustrations. 1s. 8d.
- Fables and Moral Maxims, in Prose and Verse, selected by Anne Parker. With One Hundred Wood Cuts. New Edition, 3s. 6d.. bound and gilt.
- *Familiar Tales and Conversations, with Easy Lessons from History. Many Cuts, 2s. See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. I.
- *Fishes. The Book of Fishes. With many Wood Cuts. Third Edition, 1s. 6d. See Animals, Birds, Reptiles, Shells, Trees.
- *Geography. Outlines of Geography, by George Hogarth. With Maps, &c. Fourteenth Edition, 10d.
- *———— Descriptive Geography, with Popular Statistics of the various Countries and Divisions of the Globe. New Edition, 2s. See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. V.
- Recreations in Physical Geography, or the Earth as it is, by Miss R. M. Zornlin. Many Cuts and Maps. 6s. See Recreations in Astronomy.
- *Geometry. A First Book in Geometry, including Plane and Solid Geometry, and an Introduction to Trigonometry; for Beginners. Third Edition, 1s. 6d.
- *Greece. Outlines of Grecian History, by the Rev. Barton Bouchier, M.A. With Cuts. Sixth Edition, 1s. See Rome, England, Sacred History.
- *History of the Christian Church, from the Ascension of Jesus Christ to the Conversion of Constantine, by the late Edward Burton, D.D. Fourth Edition, 6s. 6d.
- History of the Church of England, to the Revolution in 1688; embracing Copious Histories of the Thirty-Nine Articles, the Translation of the Bible, and the Compilation of the Book of Common Prayer, by the Rt. Rev. T. V. Short, D.D. Lord Bishop of Sodor and Man. Third Edition, 16s.

History of the Church of Ireland: by the Rt. Rev. R. Mant, D.D., Lord Bishop of Down and Connor. Two large Vols., 17*s.* each.

VOLUME I.—From the Reformation to the Revolution, with a Preliminary Survey from the Papal Usurpation in the Twelfth Century, to its Legal Abolition in the Sixteenth.

VOLUME II—From the Revolution to the Union; with a Catalogue of the Archbishops and Bishops, and a Notice of the Alterations made in the Hierarchy in the Reign of William IV.

House I live in; or Familiar Illustrations of the Structure and Functions of the Human Body. With Engravings. Second Edition, 2*s.* 6*d.*

Humboldt's Travels and Discoveries in America. With Engravings, 2*s.* 6*d.*

*The INSTRUCTOR; or Progressive Lessons in General Knowledge, with Questions for Examination. Seven Volumes, each being complete in itself, and Illustrated by numerous Wood Cuts. New Edition, 2*s.* per Volume.

I. Familiar Tales, and Conversations, with Easy Lessons from History.

II. Lessons on Houses, Furniture, Food, and Clothing.

III. Lessons on the Universe; the Animal, Vegetable, and Mineral Kingdoms; and the Human Form.

IV. The Book of the Calendar, the Months, and the Seasons.

V. Descriptive Geography, with Popular Statistics of the various Countries, and Divisions of the Globe.

VI. Elements of Ancient History.

VII. Elements of Modern History.

*Insects and their Habitations; a Book for Children. Cuts. Thirteenth Edition, 1*s.*

Jews. The Civil History of the Jews, from Joshua to Adrian; with incidental Notices of Manners and Customs, Geography and Antiquities. By the Rev. O. Cockayne, M.A., of King's College, London. 4*s.* 6*d.*

Jones, Sir William; His Life, by the late Lord Teignmouth. Edited, with Notes, and a Memoir of Lord Teignmouth, by the Rev. S. C. Wilks, M.A. Two Vols.; Portraits, 10*s.* 6*d.*

*Lessons of Praise, in easy Verse, for Children. Fifth Edition, 4*d.*

*Lessons on Houses, Furniture, Food, and Clothing. New Edition, 2*s.* See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. II.

*Lessons on the Universe; the Animal, Vegetable, and Mineral Kingdoms; and the Human Form. New Edition, 2*s.* See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. III.

- Light in Darkness; or, the Records of a Village Rectory.* Third Edition, 3s. 6d.
- **Little Reading Book for Young Children With Engravings.* Twelfth Edition, 4d.
- **Manners and Customs mentioned in Holy Scripture, Illustrated by Extracts from the Works of Travellers.* With numerous Engravings. 4s.
- **Margaret Trevors; or, a Blessing on the Observance of the Lord's Day.* 4d.
- **Mechanics. Easy Lessons in Mechanics, with Familiar Illustrations of the Practical Application of Mechanical Principles.* New Edition, 3s.
- **Mechanics applied to the Arts, by the Rev. Professor Moseley, King's College, London.* Numerous Wood Cuts. Second Edition, 6s. 6d.
- **Minerals and Metals; their Natural History, and Uses in the Arts; with Incidental Accounts of Mines and Mining.* With many Wood Cuts. Third Edition, 2s. 6d.
- **Modern History. The Elements of Modern History.* New Edition, 2s. See INSTRUCTOR, Vol. VII.; and Ancient History.
- The Student's Manual of Modern History; the Rise and Progress of the Principal European Nations, their Political History, and the Changes in their Social Condition; with a History of the Colonies founded by Europeans, and General Progress of Civilization, by Dr. W. C. Taylor, Author of the Manual of Ancient History. Second Edition, 10s. 6d.
- **Mohammedanism. The History of Mohammedanism, and the Principal Mohammedan Sects, by Dr. W. C. Taylor.* Second Edition, 5s. 6d.
- **Money Matters. Easy Lessons in Money Matters.* With Cuts. Fifth Edition, 1s.
- **Music. A Manual of Instruction in Vocal Music, chiefly with a view to Psalmody, by John Turner, Esq.* Third Edition, 4s.
- *———— Instruction Cards, prescribed in the above Manual; No. 1, Notation: No. 2, The Diatonic Major Scale, or Key; with Examples. 1s. per Dozen Cards.
- **Natural History. Sister Mary's Tales in Natural History; with Cuts.* Fifth Edition, 2s. 6d.
- Natural History.* See Books of Animals, Birds, Fishes, Reptiles, Trees, Shells; Familiar History of Birds; Domesticated Animals; Wild Animals; Animal and Vegetable Productions of America; Minerals and Metals; Instructor, &c.

- Natural Philosophy. The Student's Manual of Natural Philosophy; Descriptions of the most important Philosophical Instruments, their History, Nature, and Uses; with complete Elucidations of the Sciences to which they respectively appertain. By Charles Tomlinson. 10s. 6d.
- *Palestine. Three Weeks in Palestine and Lebanon. Eighth Edition, with many Engravings, 3s.
- *Park's Travels. The Life and Travels of Mungo Park; with an Account of his Death, and the Substance of later Discoveries. With Wood Cuts. Second Edition, 2s. 6d.
- *Persian Fables, for Young and Old. By the Rev. G. Keene. Wood Cuts. Seventh Edition, 1s.
- *Persian Stories; illustrative of Eastern Manners and Customs. By the Same. Wood Cuts. Fifth Edition, 1s.
- Penny Saved is a Penny Got; a Village Tale founded on Facts. Fifth Edition, 6d.
- Poetry. Popular Poems, selected by Elizabeth Parker. New Edition. 3s. 6d.
- *——— Readings in Poetry; Selections from the Works of the best English Writers, with Specimens of the American Poets. Fifth Edition, 4s. 6d.
- Pretty Lessons for Good Children; with Easy Lessons in Latin, by Sara Coleridge. Fourth Edition, with Engravings, 2s.
- *Physiology. Popular Physiology; or Familiar Explanations of Interesting Facts connected with the Structure and Functions of Animals, and particularly of Man, by the late Dr. Lord. With numerous Engravings. Second Edition, 7s. 6d.
- *Roman History. Outlines of Roman History, by George Ho-garth. Seventh Edition, with many Wood Cuts, 10d.
- *Reading Books. The First Book, 2d. The Second Book, 8d. The Third Book, 1s. 8d. The Fourth Book, 2s. 8d.
- *Reptiles. The Book of Reptiles. With many Wood Cuts. Third Edition, 1s. 6d. See Animals, Birds, Fishes, Shells, Trees.
- *Sacred Poets. Lives of the English Sacred Poets. By the Rev. R. A. Willmott, B.A. Two Volumes, 9s.
- *Sacred History. Outlines of Sacred History, from the Creation of the World, to the Destruction of Jerusalem. Sixth Edition, with many Cuts, 3s. 6d.
- Sacred Minstrelsy: a Collection of Sacred Music from the finest Works of the Great Masters, arranged as Solos and Concerted Pieces for Private Performance, with Accompaniments for the Piano Forte, Organ, &c. With Biographical Sketches of the Composers, and Historical and Critical Accounts of their Works. Half-bound, in Two handsome Folio Volumes, Turkey Morocco, Two Guineas.

Sancroft. Life of Archbishop Sancroft, by George D'Oyly, D.D.
Second Edition. With Portrait, 9s.

Saturday Magazine. Half Yearly Volumes, I. to XXI., at 4s. 6d.

————— Annual Volumes, 1833 to 1842, at 7s. 6d.

————— Monthly Parts, at 6d.

————— Weekly Numbers, at 1d.

*Schools. Hints on School-Keeping. By the Right Rev. T. V. Short, D.D., Lord Bishop of Sodor and Man. 8d.

*Science. Readings in Science, or Familiar Explanations of Appearances in Nature, and of Principles in Natural Philosophy. Third Edition, with many Cuts, 5s. See Natural Philosophy.

*Shells. The Book of Shells, with numerous Engravings. Third Edition, 1s. 6d.

*Sunday Schools. Hints for the Formation and Management of Sunday Schools, by the Rev. J. C. Wigram. Fifth Edition, 1s. 6d.

*————— Advice to Teachers of Sunday Schools in connection with the Church, by the Rev. John Medley. Sixteenth Edition, 3d.

*————— A Pocket Manual for the Sunday School Teacher, by the Rev. J. Hull. Fifteenth Edition, 1s.

Susan Carter, the Orphan Girl. Fourth Edition, 6d.

—————, Part II., 8d.

Tales and Stories from History. By Agnes Strickland. Third Edition. Two Volumes, with Cuts, bound and gilt, 7s.

Travels. See Humboldt's Travels, Palestine and Lebanon, Park's Travels.

*Trees. The Book of Trees. With many Engravings, 2s. See Animals, Birds, Fishes, Reptiles, Shells.

Useful Hints for Labourers, selected from the Publications of the Labourer's Friend Society. First Series, 1s. 6d.

————— Second Series, 1s. 6d.

*Village Annals, or the Story of Hetty Jones. Sixth Edition, 9d.

Voyages. See Columbus' Voyages, Cook's Voyages.

*Wild Animals; their Nature, Habits and Instincts, by Mary Roberts. With many Engravings. Second Edition, 3s. 6d., bound and gilt. See Domesticated Animals.

---

LONDON: JOHN W. PARKER, PUBLISHER, WEST STRAND.

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

---

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

---

BR
749
SG
1844
C.1
ROBA

101807610070

